CHAPTER I.
OF HISTORICAL SURNAMES.

“Mieux que tout autre monument a-t-on dit, les noms héréditaires conservent le souvenir des ancêtres.”—SALVERTE.

“Il y a peu de grandes maisons du Royaume qui n'ait sa fable particulière sur son origine.”—Dictionnaire de la Noblesse, 1783.

BY an historical surname, I mean a name which has allusion to some circumstance in the history of the person who primarily bore it. In some cases the expression “accidental” would, perhaps, be more appropriate. Most nations, ancient and modern, have had surnames of this kind. Those of Scrophia and Asinia, borne by the families of the Tremellii and the Cornelii, have already been alluded to. To this class also belongs the surname of Nestingum, borne by a Saxon earl, in consequence of his having been rescued in infancy from the nest of an eagle. The Italian family of Santa-Croce (Holy-cross) were so denominated from one of their ancestors having brought some wood of the "true cross" into Italy. In many instances the name has survived all remembrance of the circumstance in which it originated. Beaufoy, for example, was perhaps given primarily to a vassal who had shown some particular instance of fidelity to his feudal superior; while Mal-feyth may have been attached to one who had been guilty of an act of treachery. Makepeace, again, was probably assigned to a person who had officiated as a mediator between two hostile parties. In many cases, however, the memory of the event has been transmitted to our own times by tradition or actual record, and guaranteed by the heraldic ensigns of the family. In general the event redounds to the prowess and valour of the original bearer, either at the Norman Conquest, in the Crusades, or some other military expedition; though occasionally it rather reflects disgrace. Many of the names which have been given to foundlings belong to this chapter. A few have relation to feudal tenures.

Among the surnames said to have originated at the battle of Hastings, and shortly afterwards, are those of Fortescue, Eyre, and Osborne.

The name of FORTESCUE is said to have been bestowed on Sir Richard le Forte ("the strong"), one of the leaders in the Conqueror's army, who had the good fortune to protect his chief at the battle of Hastings, by bearing before him a massive escu or shield. The noble family descended from this personage use, in allusion to this circumstance and to their name, the punning motto,—Forte-Scutum salus

Ducum—"A strong shield is the safety of commanders."

The following traditionary anecdote belongs to the same date, and accounts for the name of EYRE :

"The first of this family was named Truelove, but at the battle of Hastings, Oct. 14, 1066, William was flung from his horse, and his helmet beaten into his face, which Truelove observing, pulled off, and horsed him again. The duke told him, 'Thou shalt hereafter from Truelove be called Eyre (or Air), because thou hast given me the air I breathe.' After the battle, the duke, on inquiry respecting him, found him severely wounded (his leg and thigh having been struck off), ordered him the utmost care, and, on his recovery, gave him lands in Derby in reward for his services, and the leg and thigh in armour, cut off, for his crest, an honorary badge yet worn by all the Eyres in England."*

There is more of romance than truth in this story, for it must strike the reader as very remarkable, that the personage of whom it is related—a Norman born and bred—should bear a cognomen so very English as True-love. The singular crest borne by his descendants must have originated from some more recent occurrence, as armorial bearings were not used for many years after the battle of Hastings. Still there may be some foundation for the tradition. The following has more appearance of credibility; while it is unfortunate that the name to which it refers was borne as a Christian name much earlier than the date of the occurrence.

"Walter, a Norman knight, and a great favourite of king William the First, playing at chess with that king on a summer evening, on the banks of the Ouse, won all he played for. The king threw down the board, saying he had nothing more to play for. 'Sir,' said Sir Walter, 'here is land.' 'There is so,' said the king, 'and if thou beatest me this game also, thine be all the land on this side the bourne or river, which thou canst see as thou sittest.' He had the good fortune to win; and the king, clapping him on the shoulder, said, 'Henceforth thou shalt be called Ousebourne.' Hence it is supposed came the name of Osborne."*

* Thorpe's Catalogue of the Deeds of Battel Abbey, p. 106, note.

As I give my authorities for these anecdotes, the burden of proof does not rest with me. And even if the reader should deem some of them destitute of any foundation in truth, he will perhaps agree with me that they are worthy of preservation as curious legends.

Among the Anglo-Saxon families who resisted the dominion of William, that of Bulstrode is said to have been conspicuous.

The head of that family was despoiled of his estate by the victorious Norman, who presented it to one of his own followers, and furnished him with a body of men to seize it by force. The Saxon called in the aid of some of his neighbours to defend his ancestral acres, and intrenched himself with an earthwork, which still exists to attest the truth of the story. It happened that the besieged possessed no horses, so that they were fain to bestride certain bulls which they had brought together within the inclosure; and thus mounted they made a sally, and completely routed their assailants. The king hearing of this gallant exploit, desired to see the heroes who had achieved it. The Saxon and his seven sons, therefore, once more bestrode their bulls and proceeded to court, when William was so much delighted with the interview, that he permitted them to remain in undisturbed possession of the estate. Hence they acquired the name of Bull-strode ! “Cock and Bull !” will probably escape the lips of the reader at the perusal of this story, since Bulstrode is a local surname borrowed from the parish in Buckinghamshire where this marvellous victory is alleged to have taken place.

The following is said to be the origin of the surname of TYNTE : In the year 1192, at the battle of Ascalon, a young knight of the noble house of Arundel, clad all in white, with his horse’s howsings of the same colour, so gallantly distinguished himself on that memorable field, that Richard Cœur de Lion remarked publicly, after the victory, “that the maiden knight had borne himself as a lion, and done deeds equal to those of six croisés” [crusaders], whereupon he conferred on him for arms, “a lion gules on a field argent, between six cross-lets of the first,” and for motto, Tynctus cruore Saraceno ; “Stained, or dyed, with Saracen blood.” His descendants thence assumed the surname of Tynte, and settled in Somersetshire.*

The name of Lockhart was originally given to a follower of Sir James, Lord Douglas, who accompanied him to the Holy Land with the heart of King Robert Bruce. In consequence of this event, some branches of the family bear a padlock enclosing a heart in their arms.

* Burke’s Commoners, vol. iv. Believe it if you can !

The thrice illustrious surname of PLANTAGENET, borne by eight successive kings of England,* originated with Foulques or Fulke, Count of Anjou, who flourished in the twelfth century. This personage, to expiate some enormous crimes of which he had been guilty, went on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, and wore in his cap as a mark of his humility, a planta genista or broom-plant (which was sometimes used by his descendants as a crest), and on that account was surnamed Plantagenet. The ancient English family of Broome are said to be lineal descendants of this nobleman.

The surname of STRONGIMANUS, or Strong-hand, applied to William de Albini, Earl of Arundel, which did not, like the preceding, become hereditary, originated, according to Dugdale, in the following manner:

“It happened that the Queen of France being then a widow, and a very beautiful woman, became much in love with a knight of that country, who was a comely person, and in the flower of his youth; and because she thought that no man excelled him in valour, she caused a tournament to be proclaimed throughout her dominions, promising to reward those who should exercise themselves therein according to their respective demerits; and concluding, that if the person whom she so well affected, should act his part better than others

* Some authorities deny this, and allege that these sovereigns never used it. True; but this does not prove that Plantagenet was not their real family name. Her Majesty Queen Victoria has no occasion whatever for a surname (the design of which is to distinguish one family from another), and therefore it might with equal force be argued that her family name is not Guelph. Non-use does not imply non-possession.

in those military exercises, she might marry him without any dishonour to herself. Hereupon divers gallant men from forrain parts hasting to Paris, amongst others came this our William de Albini, bravely accoutred, and in the tournament excelled all others, overcoming many, and wounding one mortally with his lance, which being observed by the queen, she became exceedingly enamoured of him, and forthwith invited him to a costly banquet, and afterwards bestowing certain jewels upon him, offered him marriage; but having plighted his troth to the Queen of England, then a widow, he refused her, whereat she grew so much discontented, that she consulted with her maids how she might take away his life, and in pursuance of that design enticed him into a garden, where there was a secret cave, and in it a lion, unto which she descended by divers steps, under colour of showing him the beast; and when she told him of his fierceness, he answered, that it was a womanish and not a manly quality to be afraid thereof. But having him there, by the advantage of a folding door, she thrust him in to the lion; being therefore in this danger, he rolled his mantle about his arm, and putting his hand into the mouth of the beast, pulled out his tongue by the root; which done, he followed the queen to her palace, and gave it to one of her maids to present unto her. Returning thereupon to England, with the fame of this glorious exploit, he was forthwith advanced to the earldome of Arundel, and for his arms the LION given him." He subsequently obtained the hand of Queen Adeliza, relict of King Henry I., and daughter of Godfrey Duke of Lorraine, which Adeliza had the castle of Arundel in dowry from the deceased monarch, and thus her new lord became its feudal earl.

It is probable that such names as Breakspeare, Shakespeare, Hurlbat, Winspear, Wagstaffe, &c., originated in some forgotten feat of courage.

The Scottish name Turnbull is thus accounted for: "The first of the name with us is said to have been a strong man of the name of Ruel, who turned a wild bull by the head which violently ran against King Robert Bruce in Stirling Park, for which he got from that king the lands of Bedrule, and the name of Turnbull. Edward Howes, in his history of England, mentions this man in the minority of King David Bruce at the battle of Halidonhill. His words are, 'A certain stout champion of great stature, who for a fact by him done, was called Turnbull, advanced before the Scots army, and a great mastiff dog with him, and challenged any of the English army to fight with him a combat; one Sir Robert Venal, a Norfolk man, by the King of England's leave, took him up, fought, and killed him, and his dog too.'"^{*} His descendants bore a bull's head as their arms (in more modern times altered to three bulls' heads), in allusion to the feat from which the name originated.

The Scottish family of DALZELL or DALZIEL bear for arms a denuded human figure. In old seals and paintings the man is represented as hanging from a gibbet, but this 'ensign of honour' has been laid aside, and the figure alone is retained. "These (arms) of Dalziel," says Nisbet, "are said to perpetuate the memory of a brave and dangerous exploit performed by one of their progenitors, in taking down from a gibbet the body of a favourite and near kinsman of King Kenneth II.; whether true or false it is all one, since it gave occasion to such a bearing. For, as the story goes, the king being exceedingly grieved that the body of his friend should be so disgracefully treated by his enemies, proffered a great reward to any of his subjects who would adventure to rescue it; but when none would undertake that hazardous enterprise, a valorous gentleman came and said to the king, Dalziel, which signifies, as I am informed by those who pretend to know the old Scots language, I dare; which attempt he effectually performed to the king's satisfaction. And his posterity took this remarkable bearing, and the word Dalziel for their surname, when surnames came to be used, with the signification thereof, I dare, for their motto: the crest being a sword in pale, proper; supporters, two men in armour, cap-a-pie, with round targets, now used by this ancient family.”*

Since the above was written, I am informed that no word approaching this, either in sound or orthography, is to be found in the Celtic tongue. This part of the legend is consequently unworthy of the least credit. The name is probably local. Perhaps one half of the names in my chapter on ‘Historical Surnames’ would, on strict investigation, be found to belong to the same class. I cannot, however, regret having given insertion to them, connected as they are with curious legends, some circumstances of which may be founded on actual occurrences.

Scotland affords these historical surnames in a greater number than England, and as they have all become naturalized among the Southrons, no apology for their introduction here is necessary.

* Nisbet, vol. i. pp. 259-60.

The great and widely-spread Scottish family of ARMSTRONG derive their surname from the following circumstance: "An ancient King of Scotland having his horse killed under him in battle was immediately remounted by Fairbairn, his armour-bearer. For this timely assistance the king amply rewarded him with lands on the borders, and to perpetuate the memory of so important a service, as well as the manner in which it was performed (for Fairbairn took the king by the thigh and set him on his saddle), his royal master gave him the appellation of Armstrong, and assigned him for crest—'an armed hand and arm; in the left hand a leg and foot in armour, couped at the thigh all proper.'"^{*}

The next anecdote has often appeared under various forms: I give it on the authority of a famous genealogist:

"One of the ancient Earls of Lennox, in Scotland, had issue three sons: the eldest succeeded him in the earldom; the second, whose name was Donald; and the third, named Sillerist. The then King of Scots, having wars, did convocate his lieges to the battle. Amongst them that were commanded was the Earl of Lennox, who keeping his eldest son at home, sent his second son to serve for him with the forces under his command. The battle went hard with the Scots, for the enemy pressing furiously upon them, forced them to lose ground, until at last they fell to flat running away, which being perceived by Donald, he pulled his father's standard from the bearer thereof, ^{*} Burke's Commoners, vol. iv.

and valiantly encountering the foe (being well followed up by the Earl of Lennox his men), he repulsed the enemy and changed the fortune of the day, whereby a great victory was got. After the battle, as the manner is, every one advancing and setting forth his own acts, the king said unto them: 'Ye have all done valiantly, but there is one amongst you who hath NA PIER!' (no equal,) and calling Donald into his presence, commanded him in regard of his worth, service, and augmentation of his honour, to change his name from Lennox to Napier, and gave him lands in Fife, and the lands of Goffurd, and made him his own servant.' '*

This legend respecting the origin of the name, though sanctioned by several respectable writers, must be rejected as a mere fiction. In the medieval records of Scotland, the name is written Le Naper, and it was doubtless derived from an office anciently belonging to the royal court, ranging with Le Botiler, Le Gros Veneur, &c. In England, William de Hastings, temp. Hen. I., held the manor of Ashele, co. Norfolk, by the service of taking charge of the napery (table-cloths and linen), at the coronation of the English kings.†

The family traditions of Scotland abound in anecdotes of this kind. "The SKENES of that kingdom obtained this name," says Buchanan, "for killing a very big and fierce wolf at a hunting in company with the king in Stocket Forest in Athole; having killed the wolf with a dagger or skene." His original name was Strowan. The COLLIERS, according to the same authority, borrow that appellative from an ancestor, having, when hotly pursued by his enemies, concealed himself in a coal-pit.

Some of their surnames originated in the slogans, slug-horns, or war-cries used by the clans; as in the case of the HALLIDAYS, an old family of the genuine Celtic blood, who settled in Annandale, and made frequent raids or marauding excursions on the English border. On these occasions they employed the war-cry of 'A Holy Day;' every day, in their estimation, being holy that was spent in ravaging the enemy's country: hence the surname.

The name of HAY (Earl of Errol) is said to have been borrowed from the word of onslaught—'Hay! Hay!' used by the brave founder of that family when, assisted by only his two sons, he succeeded in beating back a whole army of Danes in the pass of Lancort, A.D. 942.

The name MAULEVERER was anciently written Malus-Leporarius, or Malevorer, the "bad hare hunter," and tradition states that a Yorkshire gentleman being about to let slip a brace of greyhounds to run for a stake of considerable value, held them with so unskilful a hand as rather to endanger their necks than to expedite the capture of the hare. This deficiency of skill brought down upon him the nickname above mentioned, which thenceforward descended to his posterity, an everlasting memorial of his ignorance of hunting-craft. But that learned student in matters genealogical, Peter le Neve, Norroy king of arms, more rationally supposes it to be Malus-operarius (in French Mal-ouvrier), because that in Domesday Book (Essex, p. 94) occurs the following entry: "Terra Adamis, fili Durandi de Malis Operibus," which I translate, the land of Adam the son of Durand of the Evil Deeds! no enviable surname, in truth, if it corresponded to the character of the original bearer. The arms of the family, however, seem to support the tradition: they are 'Sable, three greyhounds, courant in pale, argent.'

Several of the names in the various copies of the Roll of Battel Abbey have Mal or Mau as their first syllable, and some of them probably belong to the class under elucidation. Maucouvenant was probably imposed upon some one for having on some special occasion violated his word; and Mautenant may refer to some forgotten act of infidelity on the part of its primitive owner. Upon Malemis, Maumasin, and some others, it would be hazardous to speculate, while Mauclerc ('bad scholar'), Maurewarde ('bad look'), and Maulovel ('bad little wolf'), belong to another category, and might have been included in my sixteenth chapter. MALVOISIN or MAUVESYN is, strictly speaking, a local surname, but its origin is so singular that it deserves a place among these anecdotes. Our old historians inform us that when a besieging army erected a tower or castle near the place besieged, such castle was called, in French, a Malvoisin, or 'dangerous neighbour' to the enemy, because it threatened to cut him off from all possibility of relief. In the northern district of the Isle of France, not far from the banks of the Seine, some time stood one of those awful bulwarks from which the great ancestor of the English family, who was lord of the neighbouring domain of Rosny, received his surname.*

This name has its antithesis—Beauvesyn, 'good neighbour,' referring probably to the kindly disposition of the first bearer of it.

* Burke's Commoners; whence also the two following anecdotes.

Tradition is at best but "an uncertain voice," and many of the foregoing stories are probably mere "figments of fanciful brains." Such, doubtless, is that which follows, as TYRWHITT is a local name. A knight of Northumberland, who lived in the time of Henry I., being severely wounded in defending a bridge single-handed against a host of assailants, fell exhausted the moment he had forced them to retire, amongst the flags and rushes of an adjacent swamp, where he would probably have perished had not the attention of his party, who in the meantime had rallied, been directed to the spot where he lay by the vociferations of a flock of tyrwhitts or lapwings, which had been disturbed by his fall. Hence, says the story, the wounded Sir Hercules received his surname. This tradition possibly originated in the canting arms borne by the family, which are, Gules, three tyrwhitts or lapwings Or, and the crest, which represents an athletic human figure defending himself with a club.

The next anecdote is about as true as the foregoing, with less point in it. At a remote period (that is to say, "once upon a time") the head of a certain family having quarrelled with another gentleman, they agreed, as was the fashion, to settle the dispute by single combat in the pound-fold at Alnwick; and such was the deadly hate that influenced them both, that having procured the key of the inclosure they locked themselves in, determined not to quit the spot until one should have slain the other. The gentleman first referred to having come off victorious, to escape the vengeance of his enemy's partisans, leaped over the wall of the fold, and escaped to Newcastle-upon-Tyne. From the affair of the key he was afterwards called Key or Cay, the name still borne by his descendants. A lame story truly!

Some few surnames have originated from absurd and servile tenures under the Norman kings. Thierry says: "Those among the Saxons who after much servile crouching succeeded in preserving some slender portion of their patrimony, were obliged to pay for this favour by degrading and fantastic services. . . . One woman is left in the enjoyment of the estate of her husband on condition of feeding the king's dogs. And a mother and son receive their ancient inheritance as a gift, on condition of their offering up daily prayers for the king's son Richard. "Hoc manerium tenuit Aldene teignus R. E. et vendere potuit, sed W. rex dedit hoc m. huic Aldene et matri ejus pro animâ Ricardi filii sui."* From a similar tenure originated the name of PATERNOSTER. In the time of Edward the First, Alyce Paternoster held lands at Pusey, in Berkshire, by the service of saying the paternoster, or Lord's prayer, five times a day, for the souls of the king's ancestors; and Richard Paternoster, on succeeding to the same estate, did not present the fee usual on such occasions—a red rose, a gilt spur, a pound of pepper, or a silver arrow—but went upon his knees before the baronial court and devoutly repeated the 'Pater noster qui es in cœlis,' &c., for the manes of the illustrious dead before mentioned; and the like, we are told, had previously been done by his brother, John Paternoster of Pusey.†—Among the surnames of this kind we have that of AMEN, which I suppose originated in some equally absurd and irreligious custom. Delicacy almost forbids the mention of another name, PETTOUR, which was given to Baldwin le Pettour, who held his lands in Suffolk “per saltum, sufflum, et pettum, sive bumbulum,” that is, as Camden translates it, “for dancing, pout-puffing, and doing that before the King of England in Christmasse holidayes which the word * * * signifieth in French.”

In a royal wardrobe account, made towards the termination of the thirteenth century, and preserved in the British Museum,* is the following curious entry; “1297, Dec. 26. To MAUD MAKEJOY for dancing before Edward, Prince of Wales, in the King’s Hall, at Ipswich, 2s.” Here the surname evidently took its rise from the pleasure which the saltations of this ancient figurante afforded the royal personage. As this name does not occur in modern times it is probable that the lady lost it in marriage.

Camden relates that a certain Frenchman who had craftily smuggled one T. Crioll, a great feudal lord of Kent about the time of Edward II., out of France into his own country, received from the grateful nobleman a good estate called Swinfield, and (in commemoration of the finesse he had displayed on the occasion) the name of FINEUX; which became the surname of his descendants—a family who attained considerable eminence in England.†

In the late Mr. Davies Gilbert’s‡ ‘History of Corn-

‡ This venerable, learned, and much-beloved gentleman paid considerable attention to Surnames. Among other conversations which the writer of these pages had the honour of enjoying with him, within wall,' is an anecdote of a pretty Cornish maiden, the daughter of a shepherd, who by a concatenation of fortunate circumstances, almost without parallel, became (by three several marriages) the richest woman in England, and a connexion of several of its most dignified families. On this account she received the appropriate surname of BONAVENTURA or Goodluck. She was born about the year 1450.

Alfray (or Fright-all) was the surname of a Sussex worthy, who died in the reign of Elizabeth. As he was in point of rank a gentleman, and as no mention occurs in his pedigree of any progenitor bearing the same name, it has been conjectured that the surname was adopted by him in reference to some extraordinary strength of limb he possessed. Though there is great improbability in the supposition of so recent an assumption of a surname, it receives partial support from his epitaph on a brass plate in the choir of Battel church. The quaintness of this memorial may render the full inscription acceptable to those who admire the curiosities of tombstone literature.

“ Thomas Alfraye, good courteous frend,

As none was found his peere !

There is a tradition that 'a certain gentleman' was compelled, during some popular commotion, to quit his residence in the north of England and to seek safety in flight; but so sudden was his departure that he was unable to provide himself with money, for want of which, in his journey southward, he might have perished, had he not fortunately found on the highway a glove containing a purse well stored with gold. How the purse came there, or how the finder satisfied his conscience in appropriating its contents, the tradition does not state. It merely adds, that deeming an alias to his name necessary, he, in allusion to the circumstance, adopted the surname of PURSEGLOVE, which is not yet extinct. What credit can be attached to this story I know not: certain it is that many years before the event is supposed to have occurred, there was a Thomas Pursglove (or Purslow, as his name was sometimes spelt), bishop of Hull.

There are certain compound surnames which may with great probability be referred to this class, although the circumstances from which they originated have, in the lapse of ages, been lost sight of. Of this order is POINDEXTER, which, however, does not signify 'right hand' as has been stated, but is, according to Mr. Talbot,* "an old Norman name meaning 'Spur the Steed,' and analogous to Hotspur." It comes, he adds, from two old words which Wace often uses in the Roman de Rou; the first meaning 'to spur,' from the Latin 'pungo;' and the second 'a steed or courser,' in French 'destrier,' and in Italian 'destriere.'

The French name VA-LA-VOIR ('Go and see') proved fatal to one of its bearers. The story is related in Smollett's 'Adventures of an Atom.' One Count Valavoire under the command of the celebrated Turenne, walking round the camp after nightfall, passed the post of a sentinel, who, as in duty bound, challenged him with the usual "Who goes there?" to which the officer promptly replied Valavoire. The soldier deeming the answer a piece of insolence, twice repeated the challenge, and twice again received the same response, until, enraged beyond endurance, he levelled his musket, and, horrible dictu, shot the bearer of this most unfortunate cognomen dead upon the spot.

Many of the names given to foundlings might be classed with historical surnames. A poor child picked up at the town of Newark-upon Trent, received from the inhabitants the whimsical name of Tom Among us. Becoming a man of eminence, he changed his name for the more euphonious one of DR. THOMAS MAGNUS. He was employed in several embassies, and, in gratitude to the good people of Newark, he erected a grammar-school there, which still exists.†

At Doncaster there is or was a person named Found, whose grandfather's grandfather was a foundling. Inventus occurs in the register of that parish as a surname.

The following was related to me by a gentleman, one of whose friends witnessed the occurrence. A poor child who had been found in the high-road, and conveyed to the village workhouse, being brought before the parish vestry to receive a name, much sage discussion took place, and many brains were racked for an appropriate cognomen. As the circumstance happened in the "month of flowers and song," a good-natured farmer suggested that the poor child should be christened John May; a proposition in which several of the vestrymen concurred. One of the clique, however, more aristocratic than his neighbours, was of opinion that that was far too good a name for the ill-starred brat, and proposed in lieu of it that of JACK PARISH—the designation that was eventually adopted!

In the month of October, 1760, a male child which had been exposed, was picked up near Shepherd's Bush, Hammersmith, and was baptized on the 19th of that month, by the name of Thomas Shepherd's Bush.*

I shall conclude these anecdotes with another on the name of a foundling. There resided in 1849 at no great distance from Lewes, a farmer whose family name was Brooker, to which the odd dissyllable of Napkin was prefixed as a Christian name. Both these names he inherited from his grandfather, a foundling, who was exposed at some place in Surrey, tied up in a napkin and laid on the margin of a brook; and who—as no traces of his unnatural parents could be found—received the very appropriate, though somewhat cacophonous name of NAPKIN BROOKER!

* Faulkner's Hammersmith.

NOTE ON NAMES GIVEN TO FOUNDLINGS.

The following extract from Brownlow's 'Chronicles of Foundling Hospital,' while it may amuse the lovers of nominal curiosities, will also serve to show how certain illustrious surnames have become the property of persons occupying very humble stations in society.

"It has been the practice of the governors from the earliest period to the present time to name the children at their own will and pleasure, whether their parents should have been known or not. At the baptism of the children first taken into the Hospital, which was on the 29th of March, 1741, it is recorded that "there was at the ceremony a fine appearance of persons of quality and distinction; his grace the Duke of Bedford, our president, their graces the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, the Countess of Pembroke, and several others, honouring the children with their names and being their sponsors." Thus the register of this period presents the courtly names of Abercorn, Bedford, Bentinck, Montague, Marlborough, Newcastle, Norfolk, Pomfret, Pembroke, Richmond, Vernon, &c., &c., as well as those of numerous other living individuals great and small, who at that time took an interest in the establishment. When these names were exhausted, the authorities stole those of eminent deceased personages, their first attack being upon the church. Hence we have a Wickliffe, Huss, Ridley, Latimer, Laud, Sancroft, Tillotson, Tennison, Sherlock, &c. Then come the mighty dead of the poetical race, viz. Geoffrey Chaucer, William Shakspeare, John Milton, &c. Of the philosophers, Francis Bacon stands pre-eminently conspicuous. As they proceeded, the governors who were warlike 'in their notions, brought from their graves Philip Sidney, Francis Drake, Oliver Cromwell, John Hampden,^{es} Admiral Benbow, and Cloudesley Shovel. A more peaceful list followed this, viz., Peter Paul Rubens, Anthony Vandyke, Michael Angelo, and Godfrey Kneller, William Hogarth and Jane his wife, of course, not being forgotten. Another class was borrowed from popular novels of the day, which accounts for Charles Allworthy, Tom Jones, Sophia Western, and Clarissa Harlowe. The gentle Izaak Walton stands alone. So long as the admission of children was confined within reasonable bounds it was an easy matter to find names for them; but during the 'parliamentary era' of the Hospital, when its gates were thrown open to all comers, and each day brought its regiment of infantry to the establishment, the governors were sometimes in difficulties; and when this was the case they took a zoological view of the subject, and named them after the creeping things and beasts of the earth, or created a nomenclature from various handicrafts or trades. In 1801, the hero of the Nile, and some of his friends, honoured the establishment with a visit, and stood sponsors to several of the children. The names given on this occasion were, Baltic Nelson, William and Emma Hamilton, Hyde Parker, &c. Up to a very late period the governors were sometimes in the habit of naming the children after themselves or their friends; but it was found to be an inconvenient and objectionable course, inasmuch as when they grew to man or womanhood they were apt to lay claim to some affinity of blood with their nomenclators. The present practice, therefore, is for the treasurer to prepare a list of ordinary names, by which the children are baptized."

CHAPTER II.

OF SURNAMES WHICH CANNOT BE REFERRED TO ANY OF THE PRECEDING CLASSES.

"Sunt bona—sunt quædam mediocria—sunt mala plura."—MARTIAL.

ALTHOUGH we have discussed our family, nomenclature somewhat multifariously, and have said little or much, as each subject demanded, upon surnames, geographical-topographical, professional, official, characteristic, præ-nominical, heraldrical, emblematical or signal, social or relational, chronal, opprobrious, dramatic, sobriquetical, adjurational, and historical, there yet remain many names which scarcely any amount of ingenuity would enable one to interweave into those classes. I shall therefore merely indicate them, without attempting to explain their origin, or theorize upon their application. This part of the subject doubtless has its rationale as well as the foregoing, but it lies beyond my reach.

One family of names which thus baffles even conjecture is that which represents COINS and denominations of MONEY, as Farthing, Halfpenny, Penny, Two-penny, Thickpenny, Money-penny, Manypenny, Penny more, Money, Grote, Tester, Ducat, and Pound; also Pringle and Bodle, two obsolete Scottish coins. The last, however, may be a corruption of Bothwell, as the name of the coin was adopted from that of the person. Angel, Noble, and Mark, although names of coins, are referable to other classes of names already discussed.

There are two other compounds of PENNY, viz. Hankpenny, of whose etymology I know nothing, and Godspenny, a northern provincialism for the usual deposit made to bind a bargain.

Upon a person named Penny some one wrote, by way of epitaph, the following distich:

“Reader, if cash thou art in want of any,
Dig four feet deep, and thou shalt find a PENNY.”

Another group of family names, equally difficult to account for, is that which corresponds with terms expressive of the various STATES OF THE AIR, viz. Rainy,* Thunder, Storm, Frost, Snow, Hail (with Hailstone), Fog, Tempest, Showers, Breeze, Gale, Mist, Dew, Sunshine, Fairday, Fineweather, Fairweather, and Merryweather!

Other names express certain NUMBERS, as Six, Ten, Eighteen, Forty; with Once and Twice, Second and Third, Double† and Treble!

These names appear so absurd that they might readily be pronounced corruptions of other words, had we not examples of similar appellations in other countries. There were lately at Rome two cardinals called Settantadue and Quarantotto, the Italian for ‘seventy-two’

* This, however, may be from the Fr. rené, renatus.;

Dobell, an ancient family in Sussex, had their name thus pronounced. Their arms were “a doe between three bells.”

and 'forty-eight.' The name of the eminent sculptor, Trentanove, signifies 'thirty-nine;' and in Belgium there is a family called Vilain Quatorze, or 'fourteenth-rascal!'

Some represent MEASURES, both of length and capacity, as Measures, Furlong, Cubitt, Yard, Halfyard, and Inches; also Gill, Gallon, Peck, Bag, and Bushell.

A few seem to refer to SPORTS and AMUSEMENTS, as Ball, Bowles, Cricket, Dodd, Cards, Whist, Fairplay, and Playfair. Dodd, however, may be from 'Doda,' an Anglo-Saxon name, and Card, I have elsewhere shown, means a tinker. Dyce does not belong to this list, for De Dice or Diss is a local surname of high antiquity, borrowed from the town of Diss, co. Norfolk.*

A trio represent paces: Trot, Gallop, Canter!

Ship, Cutter, Barge, Boat, Galley, and Wherry, with Anchor, are probably from Inn Signs (Chapter XI.), but we can scarcely assume as much of Deck, Keel, Forecastle, Locker, Tackle, Rope, Cable, Cuddy, Mast, Helm, and Rudder.

From PREDILECTIONS: Loveday, Lovegrove, Loveland, Lovethorpe.

From DISEASES: Cramp, Collick, Toothacher (!), Headache, and Ague. Fever is the old French, Lefevre (smith), and Akinhead, Akinside (perhaps also Headache), are more probably local, as the A.-S. 'Ac,' an oak, enters into the composition of many names of places.

Last but not least among these curiosities of nomenclature, are those surnames which correspond with PARTS of the HUMAN FIGURE. These are somewhat numerous.

* Vide Chron. Josceline de Brakelonde, printed by the Camden Society, pref. viii.

There were lately living in a very small village in Sussex, three cottagers bearing the singular names of Head, Body, and Shoulders, while their near neighbour (a thousand pardons!) was Gutsall, a licensed victualler! It may not be unamusing to classify this description of names according to their proper position in the human frame, thus:

HEAD, with its numerous compounds (already accounted for), with Pate and Skull, Face and Forehead! Hair (also Haire), and that of various colours.

Cheeke.

Mouth, Lipp, Tongue, Teeth, Tooth, and—Gumboil! Chin, and Beard, of various hues.

It must not be imagined that I have overlooked the nose:—that is too prominent a feature to be forgotten. I am not aware, however, of any person's having borne this name since the days of Publius Ovidius Naso, unless indeed Ness, a modern surname, may be considered equivalent to 'nesse' or 'nese,' the old English form of the word. It sometimes occurs in composition with other words, as Thicknesse, 'thick-nose,' Longness, 'long-nose;' and Filtnesse, which, if I may be allowed a jocular etymology, is no other than "fœdus nasus;" or, in plain English, foul-nose!* Having thus disposed of the head let us descend to the Neck and Shoulders, and thence to the Body (whose compounds, such as Goodbody, Freebody, and Handsomebody, belong to the category of moral and personal characteristics or qualities—see Chapter VIII.).

Side, Back, Bones, and Skin.

* Ness is however a geographical term, a low land advancing into the sea, as Dungeness, co. Kent.

Joint, Marrow, and Blood.

Heart (with Greatheart, Goodheart, &c.).

Belly, Bowell, and Kidney, with its Fat.

Arms, Hands, Fist, Nails !

Next, in respect of the 'nether man,'

*Shanks, and Legge, with its Kneebone. In our downward progress we pass the Shin, and the Foot, with its Toe, Heel, and Sole, where having reached 'terra firma,' we remain as much in the dark as ever as to the motives which led our whimsical ancestors to the adoption or imposition of such very absurd and extraordinary surnames.

A few names have been borrowed from a still more trivial source, namely, the parts of the inferior animals, such as Horn, Wing, Pinion, Quill, Feather, Scut, Beak, Shell, and Crowfoot ! Maw, which might have been placed in this list, does not belong to it, for 'the Doctor' tells us that "the name of McCoghlan is in Ireland beautified and abbreviated into Maw: the McCoghlan, or head of the family, was called the Maw; and a district of King's County was known within the memory of persons now living by the appellation of the Maw's county."

There are certain other names of common objects which have become surnames—in what manner I shall not attempt to conjecture. I select a few:—

Chaff, Seeds, Sheath, Candy, Bratt (!), Cracknell, Dram, Lintell, Pummell, Record, Wire.

* This may have been a sign. In an old ballad called 'London's Ordinary,' we read:—

"The hosiers will dine at the Leg,
The drapers at the sign of the Brush," &c.

Pettigrew is an antique spelling of 'pedigree,' Palsgrave has "Petygrewe, genealogy."

Some proceed from other NOUNS of the intangible class, as Profit, Loss, Gain, Zeal, Refuge, Service, Paradise, Sleep, Slumber, Wink, Shade, Wedlock, Kiss (a lawyer), Buss (a doctor), Cant (!), Delight, and Good-singing !

Here are a couple of PRONOUNS: Thee and Self.

A few VERBS: Swear, Revere, Chew, Droop, Strain, Trundle, Tripp, Can, Vex, Stray, Speak, Twist, Pluck, Touch.

ADVERBIAL: Inwards, Upwards.

A CONJUNCTION: 'And.' (This family bear for coat-armour an & !)

Some PARTICIPLES: Smitten, Blest, Blessed; Painting, Twining, Going, Pointing, Healing, Weeding, Hearing, Chopping, Cutting, Living, Dining, and Withering. (Some of these are probably local.) Dunbibbin should join the Temperance Society.

The following names, which look like compounds of two or more common words, may be 'set down' among our nominal curiosities, although I have no doubt that more etymological skill, and a more extensive knowledge of our topographical nomenclature than I possess, might place many of them in another chapter:

Bread-cutt, Dry-cutt, and Not-cutt.

Wat-one and Anyone. Somany.

Cow-van, Buck-tooth, Peg-ram, Good-ram, Buck-mill, Bull-pits.

Cut-love, Chilman and Chilmaid. Popkiss.*

* As Hotchkiss is, in all probability, a corruption of Hodgkins, Popkiss may be derived from some "nurse name" in the same way. Corruptions do not usually proceed upon any principles of analogy; otherwise we might expect to find Makins converted into May-kiss, and Wilkins into Will-kiss !

Middle-mist, Middle-ditch, and Middle-stitch.
Widd-up, Mete-yard, Two-potts, and Tack-a-berry.
Horniman, Horniblcw, Hornabrook, and Horn-buckle.

Hathaway and Hadaway.

Whole-work, Conquer-good, Hang-itt !

Bow-skill, Win-cup, Bag-well, and Stil-fox.

Cut-bush, Willo-shed, Ivy-leaf, Bean-skin, Hard-bean, and Twelve-trees !

Cook-worthy, Wed-all, Mother-all.

Way-good, Go-first, Send-first, How-ge-go ?

I-fill and U-drink !

U-lier !

Far-wig, Shave-all, and Wig-sell: rather barbarous.*
Groundwater, Maid-man, Bind-loose, No-yes, Boy-man, Fair-foul: rather paradoxical.

Some-dry, Dry-wood, Burn-up, and Doubt-fire !

Lin-skill, Has-luck, Roll-fuss.

Hay-lord, Man-maker, Hay-digger.

Cope-stake, Nettle-ship, Row-clippen, Bout-flower.

Kog-nose, So-thin ! Pull-her !

Flash-man, Bob-king, London-such !

Red-year, Sam-ways, Half-hide, Hare-bread.

Pea-body, Bean-bulk, Cheese-wright, and Honey-loom.

Full-away, Thick-broom, Leather-barrow.

Dip-stale, Dip-rose, and Dip-lock.

Bird-whistle, Spar-shot, and Buck-thought.

Tram-pleasure ; a railway excursionist ?

Small-piece, Pickfat, Make-rich, Weed-all, Met-calf, Good-year, Look-up, Quick-fall, Lilly-low, and Cut-mutton !

* This is local, perhaps ; Farwig, near Bromley, co. Kent.

CHAPTER III.

OF PROVINCIALISMS IN SURNAMES.

SOME counties and districts have peculiar surnames, which are rarely found beyond their limits. These are often of the local class, and the tenacity with which they cleave to the soil which gave them birth is truly remarkable. The Rev. G. Oliver remarks* that Ellerker, Legard, and Wilberforce are peculiar to the county of York; Carruthers and Burnside to the northern counties; Poynder and Thwaite to Lancashire; Tryce to Worcestershire; and Poyzer to Derbyshire.

Cornwall from its peninsular form has, more than any other county, retained this peculiarity. Who does not remember the ancient proverb—

“By Tre, Pol, and Pen,
Ye shall know the Cornish-men.”

Camden (or more probably his friend, “R. Carew of Anthony, Esquire,”) has amplified the proverb to

“By Tre, Ros, Pol, Lan, Caer, and Pen,
You may know the most Cornish-men.”

In no other county of England are there so many local surnames as in Cornwall; and as the names of places are almost exclusively derived from Celtic roots, the family nomenclature differs materially from that of the rest of England, I may remark that Tre signifies a town; Ros, a heath; Pol, a pool; Lan, a church; Caer, a castle; and Pen, a head.

* Gent. Mag., April, 1830.

In Kent and Sussex, HURST, signifying "wood," is a component syllable in some hundreds of names of places, from many of which surnames have been borrowed, as Ticehurst, Crowhurst, Bathurst, Hawkhurst, Akehurst, Penkhurst, Wilmshurst, Ashurst, &c. FIELD and DEN are likewise very numerous in those counties, as Chatfield, Burfield, Hartfield, Lindfield, Streatfeild; Cowden, Piddlesden, Horsmonden, Haf-fenden, Oxenden.

In Devonshire, COMBE appears to be a favourite termination, as Luscombe, Widicombe.

The frequency of two family names in a northern county led to this proverbial saying:

"In Cheshire there are Lees as plenty as fleas,
And as many Dabenports as dogs' tails!"

A Cheshire correspondent informs me that the Leighs are the persons intended; the Lees, a distinct family, having never been numerous in the county. He adds, that the more modern version of the proverb is—

"As many Leighs as fleas, Massies as asses, and Dabenports as dogs' tails."

As some surnames seem to flourish only in their native soil, and refuse to thrive when transplanted to another province, so, to pursue the vegetable analogy, other names, when they have taken root in a new field, undergo some modification of their character.

In other words, their orthography and pronunciation are altered, in compliance with the rules which govern the dialect of the district whither they are carried. For example, the family of the Longs settled in Scotland have become Langs and Laings, and the Longmans, Langmans. If Mr. Fidler migrated to Somersetshire, his descendants would become Vidlers; while Mr. Croft's settlement in Yorkshire would convert him and his into Crafts. I speak, of course, of early times, before orthography assumed a settled shape. So also the Tompsets and Tompkinses of the south would be Tampsets and Tampkinses in Yorkshire and the north. The rather elegant name of Beck, of the north, would, on the other hand, find itself in the broad dialect of Sussex, Back; and this would at length pluralize into Backs, and finally almost lose its identity in Bax. By the same process, the name of the author of Tristram Shandy would, in the same county, first broaden into Starne, and finally pluralize into Starnes.

The changes which many names undergo in their vowel sounds may be chiefly attributed to the broadening or narrowing tendencies of our provincial dialects. Who can doubt the original identity of Burt and Birt, Gilbert and Gilburd, Gillett and Gillott, Trescott and Truscott, Horsecraft and Horsecroft, Puttick and Puttock, Diplock and Duplock, Murrell and Morel? Some seem to have run almost the entire gamut of the vowels, as Hassell, Hessell, Hissell, Hussell, besides other changes as Essell, Hersell, Hursell, &c.

Kemble, which might appear to be a narrowed Cockney pronunciation of Campbell, is, however, a local name adopted from a parish in Wiltshire.

The clumsy termination -um, so common in the United States, is a corruption of our genuine Anglo-Saxon 'Ham;' and Barnum, Putnam, Fortnum, and Chetum are merely modifications of Barnham, Puttenham, Fortenham, and Chetham.

"We have often remarked," says an intelligent writer, "that every different district of country, or large town, possesses names which you scarcely ever see anywhere else, some of these names being evidently derived from circumstances connected with the special locality. For example, the surname Boatbuilder may be seen on signboards on the banks of the Thames, but we venture to say it is unheard of in any rural district. Names would thus seem to grow out of the very soil, and to possess an exact geographical distribution like the different species of plants and vegetables."* The present railway age, however, is doing much in the way of amalgamation, in this as well as in many other and higher respects.

CHAPTER IV.

OF FOREIGN SURNAMES NATURALIZED IN ENGLAND, WITH THEIR CORRUPTIONS.

VARIOUS causes might be assigned for the great variety that exists in the nomenclature of Englishmen. Probably the principal cause is to be found in the peculiar facilities which our island has for many ages presented to the settlement of foreigners. War, royal matches with foreign princesses, the introduction of manufactures from the Continent, and the patronage which our country has always extended to every kind of foreign talent—have all tended to the introduction of new names. It would be a vain and hopeless task to attempt anything like a classification of these names by the various countries whence we have received them. I shall therefore confine myself to the mention of a few, my principal object in the present Chapter being to show that many very usual names, generally supposed to be English, are merely corruptions of foreign words, and therefore unintelligible even to the families who are designated by them.

Of French names I have already incidentally said much. The proximity of Normandy, and the fact of our country having been politically subjected to that duchy at a period when surnames were of recent introduction, sufficiently account for the vast number of French names which have become naturalized in England. The names already mentioned, and those included in the Roll of Battel Abbey, given in the Appendix, must suffice for French surnames. I shall therefore only allude to names corrupted from the French, which are sufficiently numerous. I may quote, by way of example, Molineux, La-Ville, De-Ath, and De-Ville, which have been scandalously transformed to Mullnicks and Mullenax, Larwill, Death, and Devil ! • St. Leger, has become Sellenger ! Mombray, Mummery ; and Butvillaine, Butwilliam. The last-named family flourished in early times in Northamptonshire under the designation of Boutevillein, which was contracted first into Butvelin, and then to Butlin. Between a nosegay and a pail there exists no great analogy, but this has not prevented Bouquet from becoming Buckett. Scardeville has fared still worse ; for while on one hand it has been Anglicised to Skarfield, on the other it has been demonized (shall I say ?) to Scaredevil ! The Americans are, if possible, worse than ourselves in respect of this torturing of names, for F. Lieber tells us that “in Salem, Massachusetts, there is now living a family of the [vile] name of Blumpay, a corruption of Blancpied (Whitefoot), their original name ;” but more of the Americans presently.

The readiest corruption from the French is that which turns ville into field, as Bloomfield for Blondenville, Summerfield for Somerville, Baskerfield for Baskerville. “The late Lord Orford used to relate that a dispute once arose in his presence, in the way of raillery, between the late Earl Temple and the first Lord Lyttelton, on the comparative antiquity of their families. Lord Lyttelton concluded that the name of Grenville was originally green-field; Earl Temple insisted that it was derived from Grande-ville. "Well then," said Lord Lyttelton, "if you will have it so, my family may boast of the higher antiquity, for Little Towns were certainly antecedent to Great Cities; but if you will be content with the more humble derivation, I will give up the point, for Green Fields were certainly more ancient than either."* It may be remarked that the place in Normandy which gave name to Lord Temple's family is now a ville anything but grande, if we may trust a certain proverb which affirms that it contains only a church and a mill :

" Granville, grand vilain,
Une église et un moulin,
On voit Granville tout à plein!"†

In some cases VILLE has been changed to WELL, as Rosseville to Roswell, Bosseville to Boswell, Freshville to Fretwell! Among other corruptions may be given Darcy from Adrecy, Mungray from Mountjoy, Knevet from Duvenet, Davers from Danvers, Troublefield from Tuberville, Botfield from De Botville, Manwaring and Mannering from Mesnilwarin, Dabridgecourt and Dabscot from Damprecourt, Barringer from Beranger, Tall-boys (!) from Taille-bois.

The greatest importation of French names and families since the Conquest, was at the revocation of the edict of Nantes: hence date the Ducarels, Bernonvilles, Chamiers, Palairets, Guardots, Laprimaudays, Tessiers, Barrats, Romaynes, and many others.

* Brady's Dissertation.

† Wright's Essays on the Middle Ages, vol. i. p. 134.

Many of our family names are of German birth, a fact easily accounted for when we recollect that our present royal family springs from Germany. Others, again, are from Holland, between which country and our own, relations of the most friendly character, religious and commercial, have for a long period subsisted. Hence the familiar names of Bentinck, Dunk, Goldsmid, Boorman, Rickman, Shurman, Hickman, and many other 'mans', Vanneck, Vansittart, Vanderberg, Vandergucht, Vandersteen, Vandervelt, and many other 'vans.' The ludicrous names of Higginbottom and Bomgarson are corruptions, it is said, of Ickenbaum, an oak-tree, and Baumgarten, a tree-garden or orchard;* but I suspect that the latter would be more naturally derived from 'Bon-garçon,' a French compound as natural as our own Good-lad; to which it might stand in the same relation as does Monsieur 'Bonhomme' to Mr. Goodman.

Many Jewish names are German, as Rothschild, Hart (herz, heart). Those in -ER, with the name of a German town or district, denote the same extraction, as Friedlander, Dantziger, Hamburgher. Having no settled family nomenclature of their own, the German Jews often assume surnames from their places of abode with this suffix. Rusbridger and (perhaps) Rusbridge, seem to be derived from the town of Rousbrugge in Belgium.

I may observe, en passant, that the Germans, like ourselves and the French, borrow many of their surnames from localities. Their prevailing family names of this class have the following terminations:

BERG, mountain. Stolberg, Altenberg. The town

* Gent. Mag., Oct. 1820.

in Belgium now called Mons is really Berg St. Wincox.

STEIN, stone. Walstein, Hermanstein. It was said at Vienna, that the Emperor Ferdinand II. had, among his courtiers, three very lofty mountains and three very precious stones, viz. Questenberg, Verdenberg, and Eggenberg; and Dietrichstein, Lichstenstein, and Vallenstein.*

FELD, field. Mansfeld, Benfeld.

BACH (beck), river. Steinbach, Lauterbach.

DORFF (thorp), village. Puffendorf, Altendorff.

HAUSEN, house. Schaffhausen.

HOLTZ (holt), wood. Berholtz.

THAL (dale), valley. Kaldenthal, Lowenthal.

STAT, town. Bernstat.

It will be seen from this list, that several of the topographical terms entering into the composition of German surnames are cognate with those which form parts of many of our own, and spring from the same Teutonic stock (e.g., 'feld' with field; 'bach' with beck): hence a difficulty sometimes arises as to whether a surname is indigenous to England, or is of German or Dutch original.

Other European nations have furnished us with a few names; thus from Italy we have Boffey, Cæsar, Castilian, Fussell, Bassano, and Montefiore; from Spain, Ximines, Mendoza; from Portugal, Lousada, Lindo; from Denmark, Scrased, Isted, Denis, &c.†

The AN final denotes an Irish extraction, as Egan, Scogan, Flanagan, Mechan, Gahagan, and Doran.

If foreign names have been liable to corruption, it must not be imagined that names originally English have escaped deterioration. Such corruptions were excusable in times when few besides learned clerks could write their own names, and when the spelling of words was governed by the sound, whether truly pronounced or not ; but that they should be perpetrated now, in the nineteenth century, when the schoolmaster professes to be everywhere abroad, is a sad disgrace to that personage. I know a family of farmers who are descended from a younger branch of the ancient gentry family of Alchorne of Alchorne, and who always spelt their name properly until about forty years since, when a new schoolmaster settling in the village, informed them that their proper designation was All-corn, which name they are now contented to bear ! Another family who anciently bore the name of De Hoghstepe, a local appellative, signifying ‘ of the high steep,’ have laid aside that fine old Teutonic designation, and adopted in its stead the thrice-barbarous cognomen of Huckstepp ! A third family, who in the days of their ancient gentry wrote themselves “ in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation,” Birchensty of Birchensty, afterwards abbreviated their name to Birsty, and their descendants, now in plebeian condition, rejoice in the swelling appellation of Burster ! A fourth family, called in the middle ages Guttershole, from the name of their landed estate, are now content to bear that of Guts-all ! A fifth, wrote themselves, in the fourteenth century, De Boxhulle, and were gentry : in the nineteenth, many of them are plebeians, and rejoice, one branch in the pugnacious designation of Box-all, the other in the more peaceable one of Box-sell. These are all in Sussex.

* Salverte.

† Denis may be however from the Fr. personal name.

What can be more barbarous than Dealchamber for

De la Chambre; Brewhouse for Braose; Cowbrain for Colbran; Tednambury for St. Edmunds Bury;* All-work for Aldwark; Wilbraham for Wilburgham; Wilberforce for Wilburghfoss; Sapsford for Sabridge-worth; Hoad for Howard; or Gurr for Gower? Alas, for such "contracting, syncopating, curtelling, and mollifying" as this!

Corruptions every whit as vile as the foregoing, as far as pronunciation goes, are tolerated by several of our patrician families, though the original and correct orthography is retained: thus, Cholmondeley is called Chumley; Marjoribanks, Marchbanks; St. John, Singen† (whence probably Sinden); and Fitz-John, Fidgen.

Carew is given in its true pronunciation by some families who bear it; others sound it like Carey. To account for this discrepancy, Mr. John Yorke, whose daughter married Mr. Pole Carew, used jocularly to say, that there were at one time two Messrs. Walter Carew in the House of Commons, and that to prevent the frequent embarrassments arising from this identity of names, it was agreed to call one Carew and the other Carey, and thus to put an end to the confusion between What care-I and What care-you!

son. This reminds me of an anecdote in Lieber's 'Stranger in America,' which forms so good an illustration of the manner in which names are often corrupted, that I give it as it stands:

"The plain English Christian name and surname of Benjamin Eaton, borne by a Spanish boy, was derived from his single Spanish Christian name of Benito or Benedict; and this by a very natural process, though one which would have defied the acuteness of Tooke and the wit of Swift. When the boy was taken on board ship, the sailors, who are not apt to be fastidious in their attention to the niceties of language, hearing him called Benito (pronounced Beneeto), made the nearest approximation to the Spanish sound which the case required, and which would give an intelligible sailor's name, by saluting their new shipmate as 'Ben Eaton,' which the boy probably supposed was the corresponding English name, and accordingly conformed to it himself when asked for his name. The next process in the etymological transformation was, that when he was sent to one of our schools, the master of course inquired his name, and being answered that it was Ben Eaton, and presuming that to be his true name, abbreviated as usual in the familiar style, directed him, as grammatical propriety required, to write it at full length, Benjamin Eaton!"

In some instances an antique spelling is retained by families of distinction, while plebeian branches have modified theirs according to the fluctuations of orthography which have taken place in more recent times. Brydges, Chrippes, Streafieild, and Whitfeld, may be mentioned in proof. Henry Fielding, being in company with the Earl of Denbigh, with whose family his own was closely connected, his lordship asked why they spelt their names differently, the earl's family doing it with the e first (Feilding), and Mr. Henry with the i first (Fielding). "I cannot tell, my lord," answered the great novelist, "except it be that my branch of the family were the first that knew how to spell."

Sometimes the spelling of names is so changed that the various branches of one family lose sight of their consanguinity. I think there is little doubt that the Gorings, Gorrings, and Gorringes, of Sussex, proceed from a common ancestor, and that he borrowed his designation from the village of Goring. Similar instances might be adduced from many other districts in the kingdom.

From these corruptions and variations arises one of the greatest difficulties which the genealogist has to encounter. Mr. Markland mentions having seen a document of the sixteenth century, in which four brothers named Rugely, spell their names in as many different ways. Dr. Chandler notices the name of Waynfflete in seventeen modes of orthography, and Dugdale, in his MS. Collections respecting the family of Mainwaring, of Peover co. Chester, has the extraordinary number of one hundred and thirty-one variations of that single name, all drawn from authorized documents. "It might be conjectured," adds Mr. Markland, "that these variations were intentional, could any probable motive be assigned for such a practice."*

I imagine that our ancestors deemed this diversity a species of elegant licence, for the purpose of avoiding the monotony of a more regular and consistent mode; a species of taste somewhat akin to the fastidiousness in modern composition, which as studiously rejects the repetition of words and phrases.

The process of corruption is often strikingly exemplified in parish registers. In the course of a century or two a name occasionally almost loses its identity. In the register of Cheam, co. Surrey, the noble name of Dudley has thus become Deadly!* The Rev. George Oliver mentions the following singular mutations which have come under his observation: Hauforth has been corrupted to Alford; Keymish to Cammiss; Vaustell to Fussey!

A village in western Sussex bears the name of Itchenor. In the same district resides a family sur-named Titchenor, which is probably a corruption of De Itchenor—D'Itchenor. In like manner the family of Tichborne, in Hampshire, though deriving their name from the estate of Tichborne, might probably attribute the name of their place of abode to D'Itchin-bourne, i.e., 'Of the river Itchin.'

In the will of Philip Isaacson, made so lately as the seventeenth century, the testator signs Ph. Izatson, while his son, who witnesses the document, writes himself Stephen Isaacson. In the preceding century, a nun of Denny Abbey, co. Cambridge, writing to her father, addresses the letter to Thomas Stuteville, Esq., of Dalham, and signs it Margaret Stutfield.†

There are many surnames which have the appearance of nicknames or sobriquets, but are really derived from names of places more or less corrupted, as Wormewood, Ink-pen, Allchin, Tiptow, Moone, Maners, May-powder, Cuckold, Go-dolphin, Hurl-stone, Small-back, Bellows, Filpot, Waddle, &c.; from Ormond, Ingepen, Alchorne, Tiptoft, Mohun, Manors, Mappowder, Cokswold, Godolchan, Huddleston, Smalbach, Phillipot, Wahul, &c. Also Tash, Toke, Tabbey, from At Ash, At Oke, At Abbey; and Toly, Tabby, Tows, from St. Olye, St. Ebbe, St. Osyth. The following are taken from places without change: Spittle-house, Whitegift, Alshop, Antrobus, Hartshorn, Wood-head, All-wood, Gardening, and Killingback!

* I once knew in the South of England a peasant family whose name was Deadman; but they preferred, as in the above case, to be called Deadly.

We are not to suppose that all families bearing English names are of English extraction. "Sometimes," says the author of the 'Stranger in America,' and the remark applies equally well to England, "sometimes they are positively translated"; thus I know of a Mr. Bridgebuilder, whose ancestors came from Germany under the name of Brückenbauer. I have met with many instances of this kind. There is a family now in Pennsylvania whose original name was Klein; at present they have branched out into three chief ramifications, called Klein, Small, and Little; and if they continue to have many 'little ones,' they may, for aught I know, branch out into Short, Less, and Lesser, down to the most Liliputian names. . . . A German called Feuerstein (fire-stone—the German for flint) settled in the west when French population prevailed in that quarter. His name, therefore, was changed into Pierre à Fusil; but in the course of time the Anglo-American race became the prevalent one, and Pierre à Fusil was again changed into Peter Gun!"

I shall wind up this chapter with a curious anecdote,* which gives an ancient and well-known Grecian philosopher a regular English Christian and surname, in a manner precisely similar to that by which the poor Spanish sailor, Benito, became Benjamin Eaton.

"In the Bodleian Library at Oxford there is a MS. by Leland, our well-known topographer, written temp. Henry VIII., by whose permission he was enabled to visit the dissolved monasteries, to collect such manuscripts as he deemed worthy of conservation. It is entitled, 'Certayne Questions, and Answeres to the same, concernynge the mystery of Maçonrye writtene by the hande of Kynge Henrye the sixthe of the name, and faithfully copied by me Johan Leylande, Antiquarius, by the commande of his Highnesse.

"The meaning of all this is, that one Peter Gower, a Grecian, travelled in the east, where the Venetians had introduced the art of masonry, and obtaining entrance into the masonic lodges learned many of their mysteries; that on his return to the west he settled in Italy, at Groton, some of whose members introduced the art into France, from whence in process of time it passed into England. It is well that poor Henry the Sixth tells us that Peter Gower was a Grecian, for otherwise, the name being so thoroughly English, great might have been the bewilderment and battling of our antiquaries therein. How a Greek should come by it was puzzle enough in Leland's time, for concerning it 'he died and made no sign.' The royal cacography is so evident in giving Venetians for Phœnicians, and Groton, which is the name of a town in England, for Crotona, a place in Italy, that we may safely presume Peter Gower to be only an approximation to the real name of the great founder of European masonry, who was doubtless PYTHAGORAS! For the French, who, it appears, introduced masonry into England, spelt his name Pytha-gore, and pronounced it Peta-gore, which is as good English for Peter Gower, from a Frenchman, as could reasonably be desired."

CHAPTER V.

OF CHANGED SURNAMES.

ILLUSION has already been made to the changes which frequently took place in our family nomenclature from the substitution of one name for another; but I consider those changes sufficiently interesting to form the subject of a short separate chapter.

The practice of altering one's name upon the occurrence of any remarkable event in his personal history, seems to have been known in times of very remote antiquity. The substitution of Abraham for Abram, Sarah for Sarai, Israel for Jacob, Paul for Saul, &c., are matters of sacred history; but the custom prevailed in other nations as well as among the Jews. Codomarus, on coming to the kingdom of Persia, took the princely name of Darius. Romulus, after his deification, was called Quirinus. Some persons adopted into noble families substituted the name of the latter for their own original appellations. The practice of changing names in compliance with testamentary injunctions is also of ancient date; thus Augustus, who was at first called Thureon, took the name of Octavius. Others received a new name when they were made free of certain cities, as Demetrius Mega, who on becoming a free citizen of Rome was designated Publius Cornelius. Slaves, who prior to manumission, had only one name, received, on becoming free, the addition of their masters.' Among the primitive Christians it was customary to change the names of persons who left Paganism to embrace the true faith. The popes, as all know, change their names on coming to "the holy apostolical see" of Rome; a practice said to have originated with Sergius the Second, because his previous name was Hogsmouth! One pope, Marcellus, refused to change his name, saying, "Marcellus I was, and Marcellus I will be; I will neither change name nor manners."*- To him the conclave might have quoted Virgil, in a soothing tone like that employed towards a wilful spoiled child:

"Tu Marcellus eris!"†

In France it was formerly customary for eldest sons to take their fathers' surnames, while the younger branches assumed the names of the estates allotted to them. This plan also prevailed in England some time after the Norman Conquest. Camden gives several instances. "If Hugh of Saddington gaue to his second sonne his mannour of Fridon, to his third sonne his mannour of Pantley, to his fourth his wood of Albdy, the sonnes called themselves De Frydon, De Pantley, De Albdy, and their posterity remooued De. So Hugh Montforte's second sonne, called Richard, being Lord of Hatton in Warwickeshire, tooke the name of Hatton. So the youngest sonne of Simon de Montfort, Earle of Leicester, staying in England when his father was slaine and brethren fled, tooke the name of Welsborne, as some of that name haue reported. So the name of Euer came from the mannour of Euer, neare Uxbridge, to yonger sonnes of Lord John Fitz-Robert de Clauering, from whom the Lord Euers, and Sir Peter Euers of Axholme are descended. So Sir John Cradocke, knight, great grandfather of Sir Henry Newton of Somersetshire, tooke first the name of Newton, which was the name of his habitation; as the issue of Huddard in Cheshire tooke the name of Dutton their chief mansion.”*

* Camden.

† Æn. vi., v. 883.

Sir Grey Skipwith is the lineal descendant of Patrick, the youngest son of Robert Stuteville, whose father came over with the Conqueror, and who took the name of Skipwith from his possessions at a place so called. Another branch of the same family took the name of Latton on the same account, and still flourishes in Berkshire. In like manner the family of Major-Gen. Ireton who married a daughter of Oliver Cromwell, branched out at an early period from that of Shirley (Lord Ferrers) and adopted their surname in the 12th century from the manor of Little Ireton co. Derby.† The families of Hever and Toneford are of the same blood as that of Cobham, in Kent; while from the celebrated stock of Dering in that county, the following surnames have ramified: De-la-Hell, Wrotham, Cuckeston, Perinton, Pirefield, Cheriton, and Ash. These were all adopted from the names of places where younger sons of the family had effected a settlement.‡ In these and hundreds of other instances “a local habitation and a name” were simultaneously acquired.

* Camden.

† Shirley’s Stemmata Shirleiana.

‡ Vide Curiosities of Heraldry, p. 305.

The foregoing little pedigree of a family in Cheshire soon after the Conquest affords a most striking illustration of the changes which occurred in family names before hereditary surnames were fully established, and of the consequent difficulty which must be experienced in tracing pedigrees in those early times. It was taken by Camden "out of an antient Roule belonging to Sir William Brereton of Brereton, knight."

From this table it will be seen that in four descents, and among about fifteen persons descended from one and the same individual, there were no less than thirteen surnames. Well may our antiquary say, "Verily the gentlemen of those so different names in Cheshire would not easily be induced to believe they were descended from one house, if it were not warranted by so ancient a prooffe." It is also worthy of remark that we have here in one family, within the compass probably of a single century, five descriptions of surnames, namely, FOREIGN, as Belward; LOCAL, as De Malpas, De Cotgrave; from PERSONAL QUALITIES, as Gogh or red, and Little; from QUALITIES AND ATTAINMENTS, as Goodman and Ken-Clarke; and from the PATERNAL NAME, as Richardson.

Another of Camden's instances:—A young gentleman of the family of Preux, an attendant on Lord Hungerford, Lord Treasurer of England, being of remarkably tall stature, acquired among his companions the sobriquet of Long Henry. Marrying afterwards a lady of quality, he transposed his name to Henry Long, and became the founder of an eminent family, who bore Long as a surname. The original name of the most renowned of the compeers of Robin Hood was John LITTLE (a sobriquet acquired from his being a foot taller than ordinary men), but on joining Robin's party he was re-baptized, and his names were reversed. Will Stukeley loquitur :

“This infant was called John Little, (quoth he,)
Which name shall be changed anon ;
The words we 'll transpose ; so wherever he goes,
His name shall be called Little John.”

Ritson.

There are many cases on record of the sons of great heiresses having left their paternal surnames for those of their mothers : this was done by the Stanleys, Nevilles, Percies, Carews, Cavendishes, Braybrokes, &c., &c. Johanna Stuteville (great-great-grandmother of Joan, “the Fair Maid of Kent,” mother of Richard II.), in consequence of her immense possessions, retained her maiden-name in widowhood.* Others took the names of attainted lords whose property fell into their possession : this was the case with the Mowbrays.

Some changed their name by the Royal command, as we have seen in the case of the Cromwells. “I love you,” said Edward the Fourth to some of the family of Picard, “but not your name;” whereupon they adopted others : one took that of Ruddle, from the place of his birth†—no improvement, certainly, so far as euphony goes,

During the civil wars in the time of Henry the Fourth, several of our ancient families changed their names for the purpose of concealment, as the Blunts of Buckinghamshire, who assumed that of Croke ; and the Carringtons of Warwickshire, who took that of Smith.‡

* Dugdale.

† Camden.

‡ Fuller's Worthies, p. 51.

Ralph Brooke, York Herald, in 1594, says: "If a man had three sonns, the one dwelling at the Townsend, the other at y^e Woode, and the thyrde at the Parke, they all took theyr surnames of theire dwellings, and left their aunciente surnames; which errorr hath overthrowen and brought into oblyvion manye aunciente houses in this realme of England."*

There is much justice in this remark, however inconsistently it may come from Brooke, who had himself changed h s name from Brokesmouth.

With respect to ecclesiastics, or as they are styled by Holinshed, "spiritual men," it was, according to that historian, an almost invariable "fashion to take awaie the father's surname (were it never so worshipful or antient), and give him for it the name of the towne he was born in;" and another writer informs us that, "It was the use in old time upon entrie into religion to alter the name and take it from the place, for that by their taking religious habits they were dead persons in law, as to the world, and the next heire should inherite and enter upon their lande as if they were ded indeed; and professing themselves of an order, they were revived to a spiritual life, and so assumed a new name."†

Of this practice amongst the clergy, especially upon their entering into holy orders, innumerable instances occur, but it may be sufficient to quote the two celebrated prelates, William of Wykeham, whose father's name was Longe, and William Waynflete, who, as an unbeneficed acolyte, is found in the episcopal register of Lincoln (as Dr. Chandler conjectures) under the name of Barbor, and which he dropped on becoming a sub-deacon. Waynflete's father was called indifferently Richard Patten or Barbour.*

In our own times family names are often changed, in accordance with testamentary injunctions accompanying bequests of property. Sometimes a less weighty, though not less powerful, motive has produced the change, namely, a desire to be 'somebody,' and to avoid the imputation of low birth and connexions. Of Smijth, Smythe, Cutlar, Tayleure, Yonge, Broun, Fysshe, Foord, Sclater, Willyams, Martyn, &c., we may observe, "Stant nominis umbra." These, however, are trifling departures from the common orthography, simple "devices to turn the vulgar to the genteel by the change of a letter;"† and modesty itself when compared with such changes as Gomery to Montgomery, Skidmore to Scudamore, Morgan to De Morgan, Wigram to Fitz-wigram, Wyatt to Wyatt-ville,—"by which good common English is transmogrified into bad French, to be mis-pronounced by the ignorant and laughed at by the wise, the deserved and inevitable fate of pretension, ridiculous in everything, and most of all in strange names." Hayward, as if ashamed of his plebeian appellation of "cattle-keeper," has metamorphosed himself into Howard, whereby, no doubt, he thinks to pass as a connexion of the greatest of ducal houses. Upjohn has become Ap John, Bulcock, Belcombe, Pedlar, Shield!

The name of Huddleston is undoubtedly local, yet some of its bearers are foolish enough to think that they are descended from King Athelstan! Huddleston is a small parish in the West Riding of Yorkshire.

* Archæologia, vol. xviii. p. 109.

Isaac would seem to imply a Jewish origin; but it is not always so. King Henry III. is said to have given arms to Isake de Buriatt, who had a manor in the parish of Atherington near Tavistock, and his descendants still exist in North Devon and in London with the name of Isaac.. Bad taste say I!

Swift, in the 'Examiner' (No. 40, 1711), says: "I know a citizen who adds or alters a letter in his name with every plum he acquires; he now wants only the change of a vowel to be allied to a sovereign prince in Italy, and that perhaps he may contrive to be done by a mistake of the graver upon his tombstone." This was Sir Henry Furnese, whose surname underwent the following transformations: Furnace, Furnice, Furnise, Furnesse, Furness, Furnese.^{*} Whether he actually became a FARNESE, posthumously, I never heard.

Almack is supposed by the family bearing it to be an inversion of the Scottish Mac-All.

Many JEWISH FAMILIES have assimilated their surnames to others of English origin, as Abraham to Braham, Moses to Moss and Moseley, Solomon to Salmon and Sloman, Jonas to Jones, Levi to Lewis, Barugh to arrow, Elias to Ellis, Eliason to Elliotson, Emanuel to Manuel. How several of the Barnetts, and a few of the Barnards and Brandons, came by their Christian surnames it is difficult to conjecture. Lyon and Myers ("meier," farmer) are German-Jewish names naturalized among us. Dr. Richardson, F.R.S., is of opinion that the family names derived from animals denote a Jewish extraction, as he thinks he can discover the nationality in their physique. See Popular Science Review, Jan. 1874.

THE GIPSEYS, who, in several of the main features of their character and history, exhibit a striking resemblance to the Jews, came into England in the fifteenth century. What kind of nomenclature they possessed previously to their advent it is now impossible to ascertain. It is probable that they had no surnames, since at the present day they uniformly borrow those of English families. Their principal clans are those of *Baker, Barnett, Bosville, Buckland, Broadway, Buckley, Blewitt, Carew, Carter, Cooper, Corrie, Draper, Eyres, Fletcher, Glover, Jones, Lee, Light, Loversedge, Lovell, Mansfield, Martin, Plunkett, Smith, Smalls, Scamp (!), Stanley, Taylor, Williams.

There is one other circumstance under which, according to Camden, names were changed, namely, when servants took the Surnames of their masters. In the absence of all evidence, I very much question if this was ever at all usual. If it was, the knowledge of the fact inflicts a "heavy blow and great discouragement" on our plebeian Seymours, and Lovells, and Pierpoints, and Sinclairs, and Spencers,† and Tyrrells,

* Crabb's Gipsies' Advocate, London, 1832.

† In any case the Seymours and the Spencers may entertain a doubt of the nobility of their origin, since the former name is far more likely to proceed, in the majority of cases, from the old English seamer, a tailor, than from the St. Maures of Norman times; and albeit the first of the noble Spencers was "dispensator" to royalty, I strongly suspect that many of our second and third class families might trace with much stronger probabilities to certain ignoble dispensators whose functions were limited to certain "old buttry hatches" of certain "old English gentlemen" of later times. "SPENS, a buttraye, despencier." (Palsgrave.)

who fancy themselves descended from noble blood ; for they may, after all, be nothing but genuine Smiths, and Browns, and Joneses, and Robinsons, with changed names. Alack-a-day for such pretensions !

My reason for rejecting the hypothesis, however, is founded on the pride which characterizes great and ancient houses. This would have prohibited the adoption of the cherished family appellation—which had been for ages regarded as a distinctive mark of the high-born and noble—by humble dependents and neighbours. An excellent illustration of this feeling occurs in a late publication on Esthonia, where it is mentioned, that on the enfranchisement of the serfs on a certain estate, which took place some years since, the nobleman, their former proprietor, advised them to assume surnames ; but would not, on any account, allow them to bear that of his own family, notwithstanding their earnest and oft-reiterated entreaties. The system of Clanship in Scotland may be urged in defence of Camden's assertion, as the members of the clans generally assumed the surnames of their lords and protectors ; but the circumstances under which clans were originally formed had no parallel in feudal England. I have not space to enter minutely into the question how the most illustrious and aristocratic of names have come to be diffused among all classes of the community ; but it may suffice generally to remark, that the fact may be accounted for by the mutations to which families as well as individuals are subject in the common course of events. Families seldom remain at a stationary point in worldly prosperity for many successive generations ; and instances of the rapid advancement of some families to fortune, and of the equally speedy decay of others, must be familiar to all. Hence it is that the near kindred of the most exalted individuals are often found in stations exceedingly humble. The story of Lord Audley and shoemaker Touchet is well known; and the claim of a trunk-maker to the earldom of Northumberland, and the honours of the illustrious house of Percy, is a matter of history. There is now living in a southern county a rat-catcher whose consanguinity to a noble earl representing one of the most ancient houses in England would not be questioned, on investigation, by the most fastidious member of the Heralds' College. With such instances before us, it ceases to be a matter of surprise that the proudest names of English history have, in the lapse of ages, descended to the very "basement story" of society.

The ingenious author of the pamphlet called the "Folks of Shields" (Mr. William Brockie) says: "During the French war, it was common for deserters from the royal navy to adopt new names. There were many well-known cases in Shields, and indeed in every seaport of the kingdom. Irrespective of such circumstances, old surnames are constantly becoming obsolete [this I much doubt] and new ones being adopted at the present day, through caprice, pride, accident, or careless pronunciation of spelling. Thus Sevenoaks has become Snooks; Pontefract, Pomfret; Sopworth, Sopwith and Soppet; Southdean, Sudden, &c. A few years ago a draper at Hastings went through the requisite process of law to have his name changed from Hogsflesh to Hoxley. . . . Others changed their names without such leave. Of two brothers in respectable positions, one spells his name Cassels, and pretends to trace his descent from the old Scottish Earl of Cassellis ; the other assumed the Anglicized form of Castles." I rather think that the name of Cassel is German. We all know of Hesse-Cassel in that country.

Dr. Johnson relates an anecdote of David Mallet the poet, who, not wishing to be known as a Scotchman, changed his name from Malloch to the Norman-English Mallet, without any imaginable reason so far as we can discover. Another Scot sought to hide his Caledonian origin by a transposition of syllables. He was a sturdy fellow from Galloway or Athol, called Mac-Caul, who was well-known at a later date in the fashionable end of London, by keeping a famous subscription-house in Pall-Mall, nearly opposite St. James's Palace. Then he transposed his syllables and became Almack—whence the world-renowned Almacks !*

In "An Account of the Life and Dealings of God with Silas Fold, late preacher of the Gospel" (London, 1786), we have the following statement as to the origin of a name and its change for another and better. The legend has far too great a smack of the Romulus and Remus order to be swallowed whole. However here is the story :

"My mother was born at Topsham near Exeter, and was daughter of Captain Thos. Suckabitch, otherwise Suckbury. A West-Saxon king was out on a certain day hunting with his nobles, when he discovered a male child in the wood with no one near it but a large bitch—the maid having left the child with the animal while she went a-nutting. The king who found the baby sucking his four-legged companion, determined to adopt the foundling. He gave him, in later life, the name of Suckabitch, and a large estate round the spot where he was found. The latter was enjoyed by the family for many generations, but they long since altered the name to Suckbury."

* My authority for this statement is Kerr's "Memoirs of Smellie," vol. i. p. 436. (1811.)

Suetonius mentions "that it was thought a capital crime in Pomposianus for calling his base bond-slaves by the names of grand captains."

Finally, women, at marriage, change their surnames. How many wish in this manner to change them: how many regret they have ever done so!*

* In Spain, the wife does not change her name at marriage. The son uses the paternal or maternal name, as he thinks proper. The choice generally falls upon that of the best family, in accordance with the proverb:

"El hijo de ruyn Padre Toma el apelido de la Madre."

CHAPTER VI.

OF SCOTTISH FAMILY NAMES.

INCIDENTALLY, the family nomenclature of Scotland has frequently been mentioned in these pages, and many Scottish names have been accounted for. Substantially, the surnames of that kingdom are English, with some few dialectic peculiarities, the only exceptions being those which come from the Gaelic language, which formerly pervaded, and is even now extant in, the northern and western districts of the country. Possessing no knowledge of that ancient tongue, I am unable to illustrate this branch of British nomenclature; and as the Lowland names present no features of remarkable difference from those of England, I have no lucubrations on the subject to present to the reader.

A humorous arrangement of the surnames of the families resident in Edinburgh, authenticated with the addresses and occupations of the persons introduced, was published in that city in the form of a brochure, in 1825. These names are here reproduced as a fair sample of Scottish nomenclature.

Criticism is scarcely applicable to such a collection, intended as it is to amuse and not to teach; otherwise it might be necessary to remark that many of the juxta-positions are false ones, and many of the implied etymologies, erroneous. I have added a few foot-notes by way of illustration.

SURNAMES IN EDINBURGH, 1825.

WE shall begin with the Bald Head father Adam; from whom we have Still got Adamsons, Mansons, Bairnsfathers, that have Youngsons, Boys, and Childs; Nourses, with Fosters, that are Fairbairns, with Whiteheads and Roughheads; but we have Combs to comb their Pows.

For Playfairs, they have Dalls and Bells; although Young, we have Younger, who have grown up to Man, and, with Manners, to be Wise, with Virtue and Love; but Meek, and Humble, without Pride, with Hearts, Keen, Smart, Blyth, Merry, Gay, always with Smiles; but when Hastie, and in high Dudgeon, they Craick,¹ and are Huffy; but when we Cox them, then they begin to speak Lofty, and Crouch, and Ogle, and Pratt.

And when we give Partys, they are seldom Moody; and, although Sorlie troubled with the *Boak*² and Brash,³ they are Goodall, and have Fortunes to be given Heartly to Auld Friends, and Cousins; and Cairds, to send on a Sudden, and Instant.

CHAPTER VII.

OF IRISH SURNAMES.

AS if to maintain the characteristic of an aptitude for blundering said to belong to the sister island, what has been written upon the family nomenclature of Ireland has generally been ill-founded and erroneous. So, at least, Mr. O'Donovan asserts, in his able and interesting articles communicated to a most meritorious, but now, unfortunately, extinct periodical, illustrative of the antiquities and traditions of Ireland.* This blundering is mainly attributable to an ignorance of the primeval language of the country on the part of the writers who have undertaken to illustrate the subject. Mr. O'Donovan's essays, on the contrary, exhibit a profound knowledge, not only of the language, but of the history and genealogy of his countrymen; and hence I am induced to give a brief general view of his labours in connection with the family nomenclature of these realms.

The great majority of Irish surnames are derived from the proper names of distinguished ancestors. Local surnames rarely or never occur. Even the names of clans or septs formerly in use were taken from the names of distinguished chieftains, and not from the districts they inhabited. In the early records of the country, certain terms expressive of DESCENT are constantly employed to distinguish the various tribes. The tribe-names were formed from those of the progenitors by prefixing the following words:

1. Core, Corca, race, progeny, as Core-Modhruadh, now Corcomroe in Clare; Corca-Duibhne, now Corcaguinny, in Kerry.*

2. Cineal, race, descendants, genus. Cineal Eoghain, the race of Eoghan.

3. Clann, children, descendants, as Clann Colmain.

4. Dal, tribe, descendants, as Dal-Riada, Dal-g-cais. This word "properly signifies posterity, or descent by blood; but, in an enlarged and figurative sense, it signifies a district, that is, the division, or part allotted to such posterity."†

5. Muintir, family, people, as Muintir Murchadha, the tribe-name of the O'Flahertys before the establishment of surnames.

6. Siol, seed, progeny, as Siol Aodha, the seed of Hugh.

7. Tealach, family, as Tealach Eathach, the family of Eochy.

8. Sliocht, posterity, as Sliocht Aodha Slaine, the progeny of King Hugh Slany, in Meath.

9. Ua, grandson, descendant; nominative plural, ui;

* In England and other European countries the general family nomenclature is derived from places; in Ireland, on the other hand, the names of persons and families were imposed on localities in the patriarchal or Asiatic mode.

† So tribus and pagus apply both to a particular subdivision of a nation or gens, and to the district they inhabit.

dative or ablative, uibh. This prefix, which is far more usual than the others, is the "O" so common in the existing surnames of the Irish. "Ui," or "I," the plural form of it, was formerly prevalent.

It appears that, up to the period of King Brian Boru, in the tenth century, the Irish people were distinguished by these tribe-names only. That monarch issued "an edict that the descendants of the heads of tribes and families then in power should take name from them, either from the fathers or grandfathers, and that these names should become hereditary and fixed for ever." In compliance with this mandate, the O'Briens of Thomond took their name from the monarch Brian Boru himself, who was slain at the battle of Clontarf, in the year 1014. Other "family names were formed either from the names of the chieftains who fought in that battle, or from those of their sons or fathers; thus the O'Mahonys of Desmond are named from Mahon, the son of Kian, King of Desmond, who fought in this battle; the O'Donohoes from Donogh, whose father Donnell, was the second in command over the Eugenic forces in the same battle; the O'Donovans from Donovan, whose son, Cathal, commanded the Hy-Cairbre in the same battle; the O'Dugans of Fermoy from Dugan, whose son, Gevenagh, commanded the race of the Druid Mogh Roth in the same battle; the O'Faelans or Phelans, of the Desies, from Faolan, whose son, Mothla, commanded the Desii of Munster in the same memorable battle; as were the Mac Murroughs of Leinster from Murrough, whose son, Maelmordha, King of Leinster, assisted the Danes against the Irish monarch. The Mac Carthys of Desmond are named from Carrthach, who is mentioned in the Irish annals.

as having fought the battle of Maelkenny, in 1043; the O'Conors of Connaught, from Conor, or Concovar, who died in 971; the *O'Melaghlin*s of Meath, the chiefs of the southern Hy-Niall race, from Maelseachlainn, or Malachy II., monarch of Ireland, who died in the year 1022; the Magillapatricks, or Fitzpatricks, of Ossory, from Gillapatrik, chief of Ossory, who was killed in the year 995," &c.

Hence it will be seen that the practice of taking up stationary surnames dates somewhat earlier in Ireland than in this country. But, as in all early family nomenclature, the Irish names fluctuated considerably for some ages subsequently to their first introduction, and names which had been borne for a generation or two were exchanged for others, thus the O'Malroni, of Moyburg, became Mac Dermot, and O'Laughlin, head of the northern Hy-Niall, Mac Laughlin. In some instances the minor branches of families changed the original prefix "O" to Mac and Mac O, or Mac I, on acquiring new territories.

"O," as we have already seen, literally means grandson; but, in a more enlarged sense, any male descendant, like the Latin nepos. "MAC" signifies son, or male descendant. "The former word is translated 'nepos' by all the writers of Irish history in the Latin language . . . and the latter 'filius.'" The only difference, therefore, between the surnames with O and those with Mac is, that those who assumed the latter adopted the father's name or PATRONYMIC, while those who took the former, chose the designation of the grandfather, the PAPPONYMIC. The prefix Ni, meaning daughter, was formerly used with female names, as Ni Brien, Ni Connor.

Mr. O'Donovan thinks it not unlikely that at the first assumption of surnames, some families "went back several generations to select an illustrious ancestor on whom to build themselves a name." He mentions an instance of this retrospection in our own times, when John Mageoghegan, Esq., of Galway, applied to King George IV. for licence to reject the surname which his family had borne for eight centuries, from an illustrious chief ECHAGAN, in order that he might adopt a new name from a more ancient and still more illustrious ancestor, "NIALL of the Nine Hostages," monarch of Ireland in the fourth century! If Mr. Mageoghegan could prove an authentic pedigree to that famous worthy, his family must have been more ancient than that of any crowned head in Europe. But whether his genealogy was successfully made out or not, his claim was allowed, and his son and successor lately rejoiced in the name of John Augustus O'Neill.

A false impression prevails in Ireland that the 'O' is more respectable than the 'Mac,' whereas no such distinction really exists, inasmuch as every family of Firbolgic, Milesian, or Danish original is entitled to bear either prefix. Mr. O'Donovan proves this by the instance of a beggar having been an 'O,' while several 'Macs' have been sovereign princes. In Connaught the gentry of Milesian descent are called O'Conor, O'Flaherty, O'Malley, &c., while the peasantry, their collateral relatives, have disused the 'O,' and style themselves simply Connor, Flaherty, and Malley. The 'O's' are far more numerous than the 'Macs;' for in a genealogical MS. referred to by Mr. O'Donovan, two thousand of the former are found, while the latter amount to no more than two hundred.

The ground of the misapprehension appears to be this, that with the exception of the solitary name O'Gowan, the 'O' was never prefixed to any surname derived from art, science, or trade. The cause of this rule yet remains to be discovered.

Besides these hereditary surnames, most of the chieftains of old had certain personal cognomens, as Niall Roe, Niall the Red : Niall More, Niall the Great ; Con Bachach, Con the Lamé ; Henry Avrey, Henry the Contentious ; Shane au Dimais, John the Proud. Sometimes the sobriquet was taken from the families by whom the personages were fostered, as Shane Donnellach, so called from his having been reared by O'Donnelly ; and Felim Devlinach, from his foster-father O'Devlin. All these were O'Neills by family and surname. Sometimes the cognomen was applied posthumously, and referred to the place where the individual lost his life, as Brian Chatha au Duin, "Brian of the Battle of Down."

The following observations on nicknames, written by Sir Henry Piers in 1682, in reference to Ireland, apply with equal propriety to England and several other countries, and contain an illustration of the manner in which great numbers of hereditary surnames have been acquired :

"They take much liberty, and seem to do it with delight, in giving of nicknames ; and if a man have any imperfection or evil habit, he shall be sure to hear of it in the nickname. Thus, if he be blind, lame, squint-eyed, gray-eyed, be a stammerer in speech, be left-handed, to be sure he shall have one of these added to his name ; so also from the colour of his hair, as black, red, yellow, brown, &c. ; and from his age, as young, old ; or from what he addicts himself to, as in draining, building, fencing, or the like ; so that no man whatever can escape a nickname who lives among them, or converseth with them ; and sometimes so libidinous are they in this kind of raillery, that they will give nicknames per antiphrasin, or contrariety of speech. Thus a man of excellent parts, and beloved of all men, shall be called Grana, that is, naughty or fit to be complained of ; if a man have a beautiful countenance or lovely eyes, they will call him Cueegh, that is squint-eyed ; if a great housekeeper, he shall be called Ackerisagh, that is, greedy.”*

In the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, when the Irish families increased, and their territories underwent subdivision by the rival chieftains of the same family, each chief assumed for distinction's sake some addition to the family surname ; thus there were ‘the’ Mac-Dermot, the head of his race, and his tributaries, Mac Dermot Roe or ‘the Red,’ and Mac Dermot Gall or ‘the Anglicized ;’ again Mac Carthy More or ‘the Great,’ Mac Carty Reagh or ‘the Swarthy,’ and Mac Carthy Muscryagh, i.e., ‘of Muskerry,’ the place of his residence ; and again O’Connor Roe, ‘the Red-haired,’ and O’Connor Don, ‘the Brown-haired.’ All these additional names were perpetuated by the representatives of each branch for a long period, and even now are not extinct. An O’Connor Don not long since had a seat in the imperial parliament. It is a popular error in Ireland, that the ‘Don’ is a title of honour borrowed from the Spanish, and signifying Lord, because the O’Connor Don happens to be the chieftain of his family ; whereas, as we have just seen, it is merely an hereditary epithet borrowed from a physical peculiarity of the original bearer of it.

* Vallancey’s Collectanea, vol. i. p. 113.

The family nomenclature of Ireland, it will be observed, had assumed a definite shape previously to its conquest by the English. The natural result of so important an event would be some modification of it. But history shows us that it is not always the party which is politically the stronger that exercises a modifying power upon the weaker. The laws, the manners, and even the language of the conquered often become, in the lapse of ages, those of the conqueror: in general, however, there is a reciprocating and an amalgamating influence at work, and both nations lose something of their ancient peculiarities; and this to a certain extent was the case in the instance before us. Would that the blending of the races had been as complete as that of the Normans and the Saxons became on our side the water, and that the distinction between Irish and English were for ever merged, so that in names only all traces of an original diversity were discoverable! But let us return to Mr. O'Donovan's useful and interesting researches.

"After the murder, in 1333, of William de Burgo, third Earl of Ulster of that name, and the lessening of the English power which resulted from it, many if not all the Anglo-Norman families located in Connaught became Hibernicized—Hibernis ipsis Hiberniores—spoke the Irish language, and assumed surnames in imitation of the Irish, by prefixing 'Mac' to the Christian names of their ancestors. Thus the De Burgos took the name of Mac William from their ancestor William de Burgo," from whom "sprang many offshoots, who took other names from their respective ancestors." Hence the Mac Davids, Mac Shoneens (from John—and now changed to Jennings), Mac Gibbons, Mac Andrews, and among many others, "the very plebeian name of Mac Phaudeen,* from an ancestor called Paudeen, or Little Patrick!" "The De Exeters assumed the name of Mac Jordan from Jordan de Exeter, the founder of that family, and the Nangles that of Mac Costello; . . . a branch of the Butlers took the name of Mac Pierce, and the Powers or Poers that of Mac Shere." The Stapletons and a branch of the Burkes assumed the strange name of Gaul, which then signified 'Englishman,' though at an earlier date it had been a term applied by the Irish to foreigners of every country.

"On the other hand, the Irish families who lived within the English pale and in its vicinity, gradually conformed to the English customs and assumed English surnames, and their doing so was deemed to be of such political importance that it was thought worthy of the consideration of Parliament." In 1465 (5 Edw. IV.) an act passed intituled, "an Act, that the Irish men dwelling in the counties of Dublin, Myeth, Uriell and Kildare, shall goe apparelled like English men, and weare their beards after the English maner, sweare allegiance, and take English Surname."† This act directs every Irishman whom it concerns to "take to him an English Surname of one towne, as Sutton, Chester, Trym, Skryne, Corke, Kinsale; or colour, as White, Blacke, Browne; or arte or science, as Smith or Carpenter; or office, as Cooke, Butler; and that he and his issue shall use this name under payne of forfeiting of his goods yearely till the premises be done." Thus compelled, the Mac and O'Gowans became Smiths; the Shanachs, Foxes; and the Geals,* Whites; the Mac Intires, Carpenters; the Mac Cogrys, L'Estranges; and Mac Killy, Cock. Other families resisted this persecuting mandate and clung as resolutely to their O's and Macs as they did to everything else that could express their feeling of nationality.

The process of Anglicizing Irish surnames has gradually continued down to our own times. After the battles of Aughrim and the Boyne, when the pride of the Irish was more thoroughly humbled than it had ever been before, numbers of families of all ranks assimilated their names to the English by the rejection of their two old characteristic prefixes and by an accommodated orthography. One Felim O'Neill, a gentleman, changed his name to Felix Neele, which drew down upon him a caustic Latin epigram, written by a patriotic poet and scholar, named Mac Conwy. Mr. O'Donovan gives us the following translation of it:—

“All things has Felix changed, has changed his name;
 Yea, in himself he is no more the same.
 Scorning to spend his days where he was reared,
 To drag out life among the vulgar herd,
 Or trudge his way through bogs in bracks and brogues,
 He changed his creed, and joined the Saxon rogues
 By whom his sires were robbed; he laid aside
 The arms they bore for centuries with pride,
 The Ship, the Salmon, and the famed Red Hand,
 And blushed when called O'Neill in his own land!
 Poor paltry skulker from thy noble race,
Infelix Felix, weep for thy disgrace!”

Among plebeian families, the old Irish names have been so far Anglicized that Mr. O'Donovan thinks that in the course of half a century it will be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish to which race many families belong, except indeed by the aid of history and physiognomical characteristics. The change is made either by 'paring down' a name, or by translating it. The ancient name of O'Mulmoghery is now always rendered Early, because moch-eirghe signifies 'early rising.' O'Marcachain is translated by some to Ryder—Anglicized by others to Markham; O'Hiomair is Anglicized Howard among the peasantry, and Ivers among the gentry; O'Beirne has become, in some of its branches, Byron, and in others, Bruin. Mr. O'Donovan instances many other families who have thus changed their names, but those above given are sufficient for our purpose here.

* Mr. O'Donovan denies that Geal (white) was ever used as an Irish surname. It is, however, not unusual in England.

Other families have Gallicized their names, as O'Dorcy to D'Arcy; O'Malley to De Maillet; O'Mulaville to Lavelle; O'Dulainé to Delany, as if from De Lani; O'Dowling to Du Laing; there are even a few instances of Hispanicism, as O'Malrony to O'Muruana! A desire to assimilate with their fellow-subjects, the English—call it cool prudence, imbecility, absence of patriotism, or what you will—offers some excuse for the adoption of our patronymics by the Irish; but this assumption of French and Spanish names looks like sheer vanity, and strongly reminds one of the story of Jack Anvil in the Spectator, who, to please an aspiring wife, styled himself Mr. John D'Enville!

All these changes are of course very unpalatable to Mr. O'Donovan, and he is by no means sparing of his censure thereupon. He looks however with a more lenient eye upon some contractions, such as M'Keogh, and Keogh from Mac Eochy ; Ennis and Guinness from Mac-Gennis ; Conry from O'Mulconry ; Kilkenny from Mac Gillakenny ; “ especially when the changes are made for the purpose of rendering such names easy of pronounciation in the mouths of magistrates and lawyers, who could not, in many cases, bring their organs of speech to pronounce them in their original Irish form.”

The practice of assimilation has likewise been extended to Christian names. Thus Cathell (the same with the Welsh Cadell—now, by-the-way, become an English surname) signifying ‘warlike,’ was changed to Charles in compliment to King Charles I. So Conor has been supplanted by Cornelius, Dermod by Jeremiah, Donogh by Denis, Moriortagh by Mortimer, Finghin by Florence, Donnell by Daniel, Ardgall by Arnold, Ferdoragh by Ferdinand, and Mogue by Moses. I cannot follow Mr. O'Donovan through his etymological objections to these alterations ; but it may be as well to remark that the similarity of sound—often slight enough it must be confessed—is the only ground upon which they can be based, since the adopted name is generally quite at variance as to meaning with the original appellative.*

* In the “Annals of the Four Masters,” vol. i. pp. 41 and 42, is given a list of Irish personal names, with the English names which have usurped their places. Some of the former are highly expressive and poetical in their original signification ; as—

MALE

Ardgal, exalted valour.

Cormac, son of a chariot.

Toirdhealbhach, a man of tower-like stature.

This cursory review of Mr. O'Donovan's essays, I venture to think, will prove very acceptable to English readers. For those who would desire to see the subject more fully treated, I cannot do better than advise them to procure his lucubrations at length in the interesting periodical before referred to, which is altogether highly valuable for its illustrations of Irish life, manners, feelings, and antiquities.

FEMALE.

Dervorgil, purely fair daughter.

Fionnghuala, fair-shouldered woman.

Feithfailge, honey-suckle of ringlets.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF NORMAN SURNAMES.

HOPE I shall not be charged with wandering from my subject by travelling out of England for the purpose of illustrating our Family Nomenclature. Having devoted two chapters to Scottish and Irish Surnames, it was my intention to have written a brief essay on those of France (and particularly of Normandy), when I met with the able and interesting Letters of Monsieur de Gerville, the veteran archæologist, on this topic, in the 'Memoirs of the Society of Antiquaries of Normandy.' On a careful perusal of these documents, I perceived that I had ready to my hand a far better view of the surnominal characteristics of that province than any original dissertation of my own could furnish. I have therefore undertaken a translation of M. de Gerville's third Letter, which relates wholly to Surnames (as the first and second do to names of localities), in the hope that my readers may derive the same pleasure from the perusal of it as it has afforded myself; and with a view to the fuller illustration of our main topic—the history and meaning of English Surnames.

TRANSLATION of M. DE GERVILLE'S THIRD LETTER on the PROPER NAMES used in NORMANDY, printed in vol. xiii. of 'Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie' (1844), pp. 283-296.

After having, in the two preceding letters, sketched the names of habitations, I will now fulfil my promise of doing as much for their inhabitants. Notwithstanding my desire for brevity, this subject demands so many details that I shall approach it without preface. I shall commence with the names which can be proved to have existed amongst us in the times of the Merovingians. In the number of these, some are of Latin original; but the majority will be found to be Teutonic. I might begin with the names of the bishops of our cities, and those of the superiors of our great monasteries, but they are to be found in the eleventh volume of 'Gallia Christiana,' which is now well known in Normandy; I pass, therefore, to the names of functionaries of another class—those who coined the royal money in Normandy under the Merovingians. In citing these I shall have the twofold advantage of exhibiting the names of those officers of whom few have heard, and those of many of the places of our province where money was coined at this epoch, with the proportion which the Latin bear to the German. This proportion is much less subject to dispute among the civil functionaries than among the higher ecclesiastics, many of whose Teutonic names are Latinized in the acts of councils. I give the places in alphabetical order. In each place I shall mark the names of the mint-masters; those which appear to me to be Teutonic I shall underline, while those which resemble Latin I shall pass by without observation.

Abrincae or Abrincktae (Avranches), Berulf, Leudulf, Sepagiens.

Alna, Laune (canton de Lessay), Arigis.

Baiocae, Bayeux, Anderanus, Antidiotus, Chidolen.

Brixia, Brixis vico, Brix, between Valognes and Cherbourg, Dlauno, Waldon.

Costanca, Coutances, Leudomar, Rionicius.

Doroccae, Dreux, Gondofrid.

Ebroicae, Evreux, Ansoald, Eridegisel, Eligius, or Elegius, or Elicius. (?)

Gemeliaco, Jumièges, St. Filbert (probably St. Filbert, abbot of Jumièges; the name of Gemedico also occurs), Nectarius.

Lixiovius civitas, Lisieux

Loco sancto or santco (Lieuxaint, near Valognes), Ascariaco, Dacoald.

Rodomo, Rotomo, Rotomago (Rouen), Anoald, Audomund, Baudacharius, Bertchramnus, Chagnoald, Gniloac, Desiderio, Ernebert, Melgito.

Saius, ii (Séez), Murnus.

Sanctae ecclesiae (Ste. Mère-Eglise), Austomerit.*

After these names, which will appear very barbarous (and which are perhaps wholly Teutonic), I hasten to others which will be better understood; and first to those which indicate the countries from which the ancestors of those who bear them sprang. The name of Mancel, or de Mansel, designates a person originally from Maine.

L'Angevin, le Poitevin, le Normand, le Bret or le Breton, l'Anglais. In all these names, which are very common in Normandy, you perceive the country of those who were at one and the same time under the government of the Dukes of Normandy and the Kings of England,—particularly of the Plantagenets. At this epoch the people of these countries were brethren.

Another class of names of countries marks the soldiers, who, under the reigns of Henry II., Richard Cœur de Lion, and John Sans-Terre, often supplied the places of those who were permitted to redeem themselves from military service. These are the Picards, Flamands (Flemings), and Brabançons (Brabantines). The last often took the name of Barbançons, which is still very common in the Cotentin.*

The Gallois and the Escots are subdivisions of the English (Welsh and Scots). In the word Escot you observe the initial 'E,' which always occurs when a name commences with an 'S' followed by a consonant.

After these names of provinces, we have those of their subdivisions, as the Haguais, inhabitants of the Hague, and the Briseis, the people of Brix.

The provinces furnish the first great family of names ; then follow the arrondissements, the cantons, and the communes, during the whole period of ecclesiastical domination.

Christianity has introduced one-half of our family names ; and baptismal names abound with the corruptions which time has produced.

From JEAN (John), which is one of the most widelyspread, have been formed Jeanet, Jeanin, Jennet, Jeanot, Jehan, Johan, Jouhan, Jouan, and also Hannes, which is the termination of Johannes. This final is much more common in Germany than in France. I know many families of Hannes in Normandy.

* COTENTIN : the district around Coutances.—TRANS.

From JACQUES or JAME (James), which was Norman before it was English, are derived the surnames of Jacquot, Jacquin, Jacquet, Jacquart, Jacquemin, Jacqueminot, Jamin, Jamart, Jametel, Jamot.

From PIERRE (Peter) we have insensibly formed those of Perrin, Pierret, Pierrot, Pierrolin or Perrolin, Pierrelin.

MATTHEW has undergone great alterations, and has furnished a string of family names, as Macé, Mahé, Mathey, Mahieu, Massieux, Massy.

From ST. BRICE we have formed the names of Brissons or Briçon, and its diminutive Brissonet, Bricard, Brizard, Brizon.

Among our names of families derived from those of Saints, I would have you remark the termination in ire, to which I should have paid no attention if it were not common and like the consequence of a fixed principle: the names of Basire, Cecire, Sebire, and Mabire are sufficiently common in Normandy. They certainly come from Basile, Cecile, Seville or Sybille, and Mabile. This substitution, which has acquired force by custom, is not according to the usual mode of our alterations of names.

The Old Testament names, so common among the Jews, are much less so with us. We have, however, many Adams, particularly in the great communes of Brix and Sottevast, near Valognes. This is accounted for by the fact that many of the lords of those places bore the name of Adam, which was also adopted by their vassals (a practice which still exists in Scotland), as the name of a tribe. The celebrated Walter Scott bore the name of the clan Scott, of which the Duke of Buccleugh is the chief, and what is curious, the duke seeks his surname in Normandy, and pretends that it was originally l'Escot. (!)

The name of Abraham is rare in Normandy, as is also that of Isaac. Jacob is confounded with Jacques (James). David, Davy, and Daviel are very common; so also is Salomon, and particularly Salmon.

Elie (Elias), Eliot, Liot, and Liard furnish us with many names in Normandy.

If we could ascend to the source of these names we should often find that many of them belong to families of the Jewish race who have become Christians, either through persuasion, or, more frequently, in consequence of the incessant persecutions to which the Jews were exposed during the middle ages, when they were sometimes very numerous in all parts of our province. In the north of the Cotentin we have few large villages, however rural, which have not their 'Jews' Street' (rue des Juifs), which proves at the same time the state of isolation to which they were subjected. [In London we have the Old Jury, so called from its having been the Jewish quarter of the city.]

Among our more modern saints, many of our primitive missionaries have given their names to families. Among these names may be reckoned Aubin, Martin, Sanson, Brice, Malo, Ravend.

It may be said, perhaps, that I have made the district of the Cotentin most conspicuous in this subdivision. This should not surprise any; for every one takes by preference the objects which are at hand. I throw down my superficial observations in haste; and every one is at liberty to make the application to the names which are most familiar to him.

I have not as yet said anything of feminine surnames, which have likewise borne a great part in the denomination of our families. Marie would of course stand at the head of these. A great number of families bear this name. It has also many derivatives, such as Mariette, Mariotte, Mariolle, Marion.

Anne and Jeanne are but little less common among our Norman families.

Catherine, Marguerite, Marguerin, and Maguerie have given their names to many families.

I could not finish, if I should undertake, an enumeration of this kind; but I must not forget that I am merely making general observations. I will only notice, in passing, that the female names in our families often give rise to suspicions of illegitimacy.

After these feminine names I would point out those which seem to belong to saints of German origin. Among these are many which terminate in Mond, as Osmond, Vimond, Evremond, and Vermond. Instead of the 'D' final a 'T' is often used, because it is more readily understood; but this substitution gives a false meaning; for mond signifies the mouth or outlet of a river, whereas mont means a mountain or height. Osmond, Evremond, Vimond, and Vermond have all the same signification.

Bernard, Barnard, Berners, Barnette, and Bernet are common throughout Normandy. Our name Barneville, which belongs to three departments of the province, comes from this source. Bern in German means a bear; but by the substitution of 'V' for 'B,' which is exceedingly frequent, we get an etymology which is far more natural—that of a river, which requires no change.

The name Godefroy, Godefray, Jefrey, Geoffroy, again, is German, and signifies 'peace of God'—Godfrid. This is the name which was borne by the chief of the royal house of Plantagenet, and the founder of the cathedral of Coutances, who was at once a great warrior and a great bishop.

Before leaving baptismal names, I think I ought to give some examples of the kind of transformation which the termination 'E' undergoes in some of these names.

In speaking of the name of Matthieu and its variations, I have said that it sometimes changes itself into Mathé, Macé, and even Mahé. The names ending in é, such as André and Hervé, often become Andrieu and Hervieu. From Andrieu we often make Drieu. Hervieu in Brittany retains its primitive termination Hervé. Sometimes in Normandy we call it Hervot. In composition we often make Hervu and Andru—l'Andrurie and la Hervurie signify the habitation of André and of Hervé.

One eastern saint, St. Nicholas, whose Greek name was perhaps unknown in Normandy prior to the Crusades, has given his designation to a great number of French and Italian families. But although it is of such recent introduction into France, it has nevertheless taken very numerous developments in our family nomenclature. We have everywhere the names of Nicol, Nicolet, Colas, Colart, Colardin, Colardeau, Collet, and Collette.

Of GUILLEAUME or VILLEAUME (William) we have formed the names of Guillot, Guillotte, Guillard, Villot, Villard, Guillemin, Villemain, Guillemette, Guilmard, Guilmot, Guilmoto, and Guillemino.

I shall close my remarks upon this Teutonic nomenclature with a doubtful name, whose origin vacillates between the Latin and the German: it is that of Gisles (Giles), which in Latin has been made Ægidius, but which is probably derived from the German word Gisel or Gesel. This word signifies 'a companion.' It has furnished us with the following modifications:—Gisart, *Giro*t, Gislain, Giret, Girard, Gillette, Gillart, and Gillon or Villon.

I cannot pass in silence the name of Charlemagne, some of whose contemporaries have made him a saint. What is more certain is, that from his time to that of St. Charles Borromée, seven or eight kings of France have borne his name, to say nothing of other princes and of thousands of nobles and private persons. In the great chronicles of St. Denis, the original name of Karl is translated Charles. Charles the Bald there styles himself Charles le Cauf. From Cauf we have formed the names of Cauvin, Chauvin, Cauvé, and Chauvé, which have introduced themselves into families in plenty.

We pass now to the names of functionaries, civil, military, and ecclesiastical. The kings, the princes, the dukes, the marquises, the counts, the viscounts, the barons, the lords, the bailiffs, and the provosts are well represented in all the families of the province. Everybody understands these names.*

* Viz.: Le Roi, Le Prince, Le Duc, Le Marquis, Le Comte (whence our own Le count), Le Vicomte, Le Baron, Le Seigneur, Le Bailli, and

The bishops, the canons, the abbots, the priors, and the clerks* are not more rare, and they present no difficulty ; but we had formerly, in our forests, officers whose titles show a Germanic origin. The names of Walter, Vaultier, Gualtier, and Vatier are derived from the German word Wald, which signifies 'forest,' so that Vaultier and Forestier are synonymes. The names of Verdier, Verderie, Boscher, and Buscher designate the same functionaries, but perhaps in an inferior rank. The names of Lavarde and La Verderie mark the space assigned to each guard. Sometimes, however, Verdérie is employed in the sense of jurisdiction. The Verdier was a judge of petty offences against the forest laws.

We find also many surnames given on account of the stature, the tournure, the complexion, or the hair, and often on account of the bodily infirmities and deformities of the ancestor of each family.

How many persons have we known by the names of Le Grand, le Petit, le Gros, le Gras, le Grêle, le Blanc, le Brun, le Blond, le Rous, le Rouge, le Noir, Blondin, Blondeau, Blondel, Travers, Caignon (mean, pitiful), Gars or Galus (squinting). Others are known by bad qualities, as Mauduit, Mauvoisin, Mauclerc.

Others bear the names of animals, domestic or wild, as Le Cat, le Kien (it must be observed that ch before a vowel is sometimes pronounced as k), Poulet, Pouchain, Coq, Capon, le Bœuf, le Renard, le Loup, le

Le Provot, or Prevot. These, it is almost unnecessary to add, are frequently used without the prefixed article, as Roi ; sometimes combined with it, as Leroi or Leroy.—TRANS.

* L'Evêque, Le Chanoine, L'Abbé, Le Prieur, Le Clerc.—TRANS.

Tuisson (badger), l'Oison, le Goupil (fox), l'Oisel or l'Oiseau, le Daim, le Lion, Louvel, Loveau, or Loup.

The love of property is very apparent in the history of our denominations. This chapter is immense; I can only point it out to those who may desire to examine the subject more thoroughly.

The Châteaux, the Manoirs, the Mesnils (a diminutive of manor), the Mazures,* and the Maizieres: these last names are of a subordinate rank. I will add the Borderies, the Londes, the Essarts, the Esserts, and even Desert, the Coutures, the Croutes, the Berqueries (bergeries), the Bergers, the Bouveries, the Vacqueries, the Etableries; I do not find the écuries, which proves the novelty of the word.

In former times horses were lodged in sheds (étales);† the English have retained this name, even for the places where the royal horses are kept (stables).

The Longchamps, the Courtchamps, the Champs, the Haies, the Fossés, the Banques (a word peculiar to some districts of Normandy, and signifying the same as the Latin agger), the Marais or Maresq, the Près, the Prairies, the Vergers, the Monts, the Vaux, and the Costils, furnish names common throughout Normandy.‡

The name of Grange is not very common; that of Moutier, or Moustier, or Monstier, or Moitier, to signify

* In his second letter, M. de Gerville derives these words from the Latin mansio, which is also the origin of "mesnil."—TRANS.

† The O. F. 'estable' meant a shed; not a comfortable building with windows and doors like a modern stable or écurie.—TRANS.

a place anciently occupied by monks [Anglicé, 'minster,' from 'monasterium'], is more frequent. Vouvier, Vacher, Bouverie and Vacquerie, Pasquier and Pasquet (pasturage) are not rare.

The Rochers, Roques, Roches, and Roquiers afford us many surnames. Frequently le Roque indicates an ancient fortified manor-house, whence Roquefort and Rochefort. When these 'roches' bear the name of a proprietor, as Roche-Bernard, Roche-Mont, they are often fortresses.

Woods and groves [Bois and Boscq] are inexhaustible sources of names. To this origin belong Boissière, Bocage, Bosquet or Bauquet, Buquet, and Bucaille—all common names.

The Rivières, Ruisseaux, Etangs, and *Mares likewise enter into our proper names. We find the Taillis and the Forêts [Underwoods and Forests] represented, but never the futaies [woods of lofty trees]. The Buissons [Bushes] have also their share, and so have the Bissons and the Byssoneries.

The Landes and the Landais [Heaths] naturally find themselves side-by-side with the Buissons. A very ancient name for a coppice, le Breuil, is very common, as is also that of Breuilly. The name of Broglie, which has been naturalized in Normandy, has come to us from Italy, and it has the same meaning as Breuil. That of Champagne is not unusual, although the greater part of the champaign country has been divided and enclosed for centuries. It is not necessary to conclude that those who bear this name have come from the province of Champagne, since all our cultivated plains in old times bore this designation. In this sense it is still retained in England, where many Norman names which we have lost might be found, if wanted.

The stones themselves have not been overlooked in our nomenclature. The name of La Pierre, among us, goes back perhaps to Druidical stones; but these ordinarily have an epithet, as Pierrefitte, Pierre-lée, or Pierre-levée. The name of Perrelle indicates the possession of a stony ground; that of Perruque, in the same sense, is not very unusual in the Cotentin.

Although our ways and our roads usually escape our family nomenclature, we cannot say the same of our Rues and our Chemins. The names of Perrière, Ferrière, and Quérière, which signify ancient roads, are not uncommon. The name of Quérière, which is not French, has nevertheless come into use: it signifies a course or way; but a distinction must be made between carrière, a way, and carrière, a stone-quarry.

The business of the gardener is very ancient; this may be the reason why so many families bear the name Jardinier. Formerly we had our 'Gardin' and 'Gardinier'; now we have our Jardin, and Jardinier, but the change took place long ago, since the latter names nearly equal the former.

In our country-places we have a name still more ancient—that of Courtil or Courtel; the latter is generally used in the singular, the former in the plural. These names, which belong to the middle ages, have not been overlooked in the Glossary of Ducange.

Many of our family names refer to the ancient land measures of Normandy, the Acres, the Arpents,* and the Verges, which must not be confounded with the

* Hence our Larpent.—TRANS.

Vergers, the synonyme of 'plants.' This last name is probably not very ancient, for I am not acquainted with a single family bearing it.

I have no need to speak of the Monts, the Vaux, the Vallons, and the Vaucelles.*

Among the trees which have furnished us with surnames, fruit trees form but a small number. We have some Pommiers, a few more Poiriers (or Poriers), and very few Pruniers; no 'pêchers' or 'abricotiers' which are of modern introduction; plenty of Epines.

The name of néflier [medlar] is not ancient; it has replaced that of 'meslier.'

The names of forest trees are oftener used as family names. The Quesnes (chênes) are found everywhere, also the Chesnes, the Quesnays, the Quesnois.† Rouvre, the more ancient name of the oak, is not common among the family names of Normandy. Rouvraie is more frequent. Frêne and Fouveau have been adopted generally enough, as well as their modifications, Fresnaie, Fresnay, Foulaye, and Foulay. The elm [Orme] was probably little known to our ancestors, as it scarcely finds a place among our surnames. It is still sufficiently rare in the vicinity of Brittany, where the chestnut is substituted for it, as among us on the contrary, in times more remote, it assumed the place of the chestnut, which is often seen in the timber-work of our old houses.

The beech [hêtre] is not comprised in this exclusion its use in Normandy is of long standing, though its present name is modern. It formerly bore one derived from the Latin 'fagus,' and was called Fau, Fay,

* Eng. equivalents: Hill, Vale, Dale, and Littledale.—TRANS.

† Quesnel is also frequent in Normandy.—TRANS.

Fayel, Fou. The 'hanging-beech' on the banks of the Orne is well known in the ancient histories of William the Conqueror. Plantations of beech were called Faye, Fayel, Fautlaie.

In our country-places the 'noyer' [walnut-tree] is often called 'gauguier;' but as a family name, Noyer only is employed. The name of the 'noisetier' does not occur in this way, and those of Noisette, Coudre, Coudraie, or Coudray but rarely.*

The name of the 'aulne' [alder] does not figure much among family names, but that of Aunay† is common enough.

The names of Houx,‡ and Houssaie, with those of Houssin, Housset, and Houssart, are not very uncommon.

If we may judge by the names of Bussière, Bouisset (and perhaps Boisset, and Boissaye), the box-tree was formerly more cultivated than at present. I am not sure that Boissière comes from 'bouis' rather than from 'bois.'

Were I to enter more thoroughly into this matter, I should not be able to exhaust it, but I ought to repeat that I merely point out the subject in a superficial manner. My object is simply to call attention to a topic which has scarcely been noticed.

The chapter of names borrowed by families from

* They correspond exactly with our Nutt, Haseltree, and Hazelwood or Haslewood: we have also adopted Cowdray, from the French 'coudraie,' which is likewise precisely our Hazelgrove.—TRANS.

† D'aunay, among old family surnames is well known. We have also translated it to Aldershaw. From 'aulnette,' an old diminutive of 'aulne' or alder, probably comes our Allnutt; but whence do we get Nuttall?—TRANS.

‡ I never knew an Englishman with this prickly name (holly); we borrow, however, Hussey from the Normans, and have, besides, our indigenous Hollygroves.—TRANS.

agriculture, from the arts, from handicrafts, and from industry and commerce, ought not to be passed over in silence. This very extensive subject demands some elucidations.

The Chartiers, Cartiers, and the Quertiers, names of the conductors of carts and carriages, must not be overlooked. The Bergers, the Pâtours, or Pâtourels, the Pastoureaux, the Pasquiers, and the Porchers or Porquers, have no need of explanation.

The name of Harivel is very common. It is synonymous with that of Haridelle, which is still found in the modern dictionaries. 'Harivels' or 'harivelliers' are very common at our fairs: they are persons who trade only in 'harins' or 'haridelles,' small and inferior horses, leaving the traffic in coursers and animals of a superior quality to the jockeys.

If we pass from the trade in horses to that in bullocks, we perceive from our family names that it is no less ancient. The name of Le Bœuf is very frequent in Normandy; those of Bouvier and Bouverie are less so, because they belong more particularly to the pastoral districts. The names which designate the bull [taureau] have scarcely a place among our surnames: when they occur, they are written Thoreau and Thorel. The trade in cows, bulls, and sheep formerly belonged to the 'Bouvier.'

In speaking of sheep, I have forgotten to mention that the names of Belier and Berrier, which are synonymous, are often found as family names.

The arts make no great show in our family nomenclature. This may arise from the fact, that in former times artists contented themselves with names more modest than those which they now assume. The architects who built our splendid churches were satisfied with the title of 'machons' or 'maçons.' The name of Machon, which is often found in medieval documents, has taken the more polished form, as a family designation, of Maçon or Masson.

The painters have, in part, retained the name of Peinteur; the alteration of this word commenced, however, at an early date, when some families of the name of Lepeintre, with the modern orthography, occur.

I have not found any families of the name of 'tailleur;' this business formerly bore that of Couturier. This alone is preserved in our family nomenclature; while our neighbours over the water have often introduced that of 'Taylor.'

No family has, as far as I am aware, adopted the name of 'cordonnier,' 'bottier,' or 'savetier,' which last is common in the south of France under the orthography of Sabatier. All my researches to find the ancient name in Normandy have been fruitless, unless it be that of Sueur, which is common enough, and which may be derived from 'sutor.'

We have in our country-places a surname which is sufficiently common, and which may bear this signification—that of Cauchard. These two conjectures I hazard, but I am far from presenting them as established. However that may be, the name of Cauchon, so well known in the history of Joan of Arc, is most certainly identical with our modern 'chausson;' now the 'chausson' serves as a covering for the foot, and it is not far from that to Cauchard.

The Carpentiers, Querpentiers, or Charpentiers belong to all ages; they evidently go back to the 'carpentarii' and to the 'carpentum' of the Romans. This name is very common. The English, who borrowed it from our ancestors, retain it as well as ourselves. The name of Charron or Carron [Anglicè, Cartwright], which belongs to a particular sort of carpenters, is not nearly so common as the preceding, and what appears to me singular, is the fact, that the name of Houelleur, which means 'charron' in English, is as common, at least in the Cotentin, as that of Carron or Charron. I imagine that it was introduced into Normandy during the thirty-two years' occupation of this country by the English in the fifteenth century. The English orthography is very different from ours, namely, Wheeler: it literally signifies a maker of wheels.

The joiners and cabinet-makers are not included in this nomenclature: this is probably to be accounted for by the comparative recency of these trades. It is not impossible, however, that our name of Menicier may have some analogy with the calling of the joiner (menuisier).

The Drapiers have but a small share in our family names; it is probable that the name is more common in Flanders, where this branch of industry is very ancient.

We have, however, a sufficient number of Foulons, but very few Filassiers,* although flax is common in many parts of Normandy.

The Pelletiers (skinners) are common everywhere. This trade is as well represented in the families of England and Germany as in our own.

But the trade which is most widely extended throughout all parts of the province is that of the weaver [Tisserand], of which the clothiers [Toiliers] are a branch. The names of Tellier, Tessier, Texier, and Tixier are as common as possible. I have met with them everywhere, which is not surprising; since without such workmen we should be obliged, like savages, to clothe ourselves in the skins of animals.

* Fullers and Flaxmans.—TRANS.

Agriculture has supplied us with two names, whose use is very circumscribed—the Batteux or Batteurs [thrashers] of corn, and the Faucheux, Fauqueux, or Faucheurs [mowers]. The Batteux are more common than the Batteurs.

But the artisans in metals are those who have furnished us with the most surnames. These are not restricted to any place—the manufacture of metals belongs to every country. This branch of industry originally bore a generic name among all the nations of Europe. Among us, and in the south of France, this name is derived from the Latin faber. Hence have the Italians their word ‘fabbro,’ the Provençals ‘fabre’ and ‘faure,’ and ourselves Lefevre. The Saxons and their descendants, as the Dutch and the English, derive it from ‘schmiden,’ which signifies to forge or smite. This has become Schmidt, which the English have refined to Smith, from which they have taken the names of Gold- and Silver-smith: with us there are only ‘Or-fèvres.’ In short, the name of Fevre among us, that of Fabre in the South, and that of Schmidt in Germany, are most common. In its primitive state, the name of Fevre, with us, still took the b of Faber, and was written Febure, or Faibure.

Among those who forge iron we have had, from time immemorial, two widely-spread divisions—the Serruriers and the Maréchaux-Ferriers [locksmiths and farriers]. The former are not, by a great deal, so numerous as the latter. This arises from their trade being more refined, and from their being subdivided into Arbalétriers, whom we call 'arquebusiers' [gunsmiths], and Lorimiers, who were engaged in the manufacture of defensive arms.* All these subdivisions have left us some names, though in no great number.

It is not so with the 'maréchaux;' they are to be found all over the country. From the higher functionaries of the military order to the humblest smiths, we meet with their names everywhere. The names of Ferrier, Ferey, Feron, Ferrant, and La Forge belong to this pursuit.†

Another class of workers in iron, the Cloutiers, [nailers,] has also furnished some names; but this occupation and the name of Cloutier are most frequent in the forest districts.

The manufacture of instruments in copper, or rather in brass, is less ancient among us. It is said that the first braziers came to us from Auvergne, under the later Dukes of Normandy, through the marriage of Henry II. with Eleanor, daughter of one of the Counts of Aquitaine. The first braziers established themselves at the extremity of the arrondissements of Avranches and St. Lo. It is still at Villedieu that they carry on their principal trade. Under the reign of Richard Cœur-de-Lion and his successor there was a military commandery which had constant communications with

* I am not acquainted with the history of this word; it may originally have meant one who made mail and the whole of the defensive accoutrements of a warrior, and have had some relation to the Latin lorica. At present it means one who makes spurs and bits, and in this sense, even, it is obsolescent, if not obsolete.—TRANS. [Vide infra.]

† To these we should probably add Ferrars, Ferrers, Ferris, Fears, Ferrey, Fearon, and Farrant, all now naturalized in England.—TRANS.

Auvergne. Their hawkers have always gone about under the name of Magnants, Magnens, or Magnans—which is widely spread in Normandy.

The designations of the ‘arquebusier’ and the ‘armurier’ have not become surnames. This will cause no surprise, for the use of fire-arms is not of sufficiently early date. The Arbalétriers themselves are rare, because the use of the crossbow is far less ancient than that of the simple [long] bow. This latter has furnished us with many surnames. Bows, as offensive weapons, ascend among all nations to the primitive period of their history.

The name of Digard, so common here, refers to the trade of the spur-maker, and to the period when the verb ‘diger’ was in use instead of ‘piquer.’ I think the name of Diguet has the same origin. The ancient spurs, instead of rowels, had simply ‘diguets’ or ‘digarts’ [Anglicè ‘pryckespurs’].

I have mentioned the old word Lorimier, which has left us some surnames. It reaches back to the times when war-horses were barbed with iron. The saddlers [Selliers] have displaced the Lorimiers: their occupation is less military as it is less metallic.

While speaking of the masons who constructed our houses of stone, I ought not to have forgotten those who covered their roofs. They are of three kinds—the thatchers, the tilers, and the slaters. The second have left us more names than both the others together. We have plenty of Thuiliers and Thwileries. It is probable that the thatchers had a widely-spread name, but it has escaped me. The names of Couvreur and Choismier will hardly do.* As to the trade of those who cover buildings with slate, I have not found it represented in our family nomenclature, although the English have long since introduced the name of Slater. This no doubt arises from the fact of their great quarries of slate being near the sea, or adjacent to navigable rivers, and from that of England being an island, and hence from an early period they have been able to bring in the slate by water conveyance, as we now do into some of the ports of Normandy.

I shall here close my slight view of the proper names of Normandy. I make no pretensions to having gone thoroughly into this important subject; but I believe I have succeeded in pointing out the means by which an inquirer may employ himself in a manner at once rational, simple, and easy.

I might well be reproached with omissions; but I repeat that I have not undertaken to treat profoundly the subject of proper names. I present only the canvas upon which I have sketched the first outline; and I beg that those who may desire to embroider the design, will not act like those of whom the great reformer of natural history makes complaint: "They have perched themselves upon my shoulders," said he, "and have treated me in a manner rather disdainful; insidentes humeris non sine supercilio."

ADDITIONS

TO M. GERVILLE'S THIRD LETTER ON NORMAN NAMES,
BY M. A. L.

Several eminent families from Normandy who took an active part in the affairs of England after the Conquest may here be mentioned.

Mowbray. The Barons Mowbray took their name from the castle of Montbrai, Molbrai, or Moubrai, near St. Lo in the Cotentin. Geoffry de Moubray accompanied William with a great force to Hastings (Wace), and was rewarded with vast grants in England. From this powerful race sprang the Earls of Northumberland, the Earls of Nottingham, and the Dukes of Norfolk. (Vide "Norman People," p. 339.)

Say. A branch of the family of Avenel were lords of Saie near Argentan, and they used the names of Say and Pigot indifferently. They had good lands in many counties, and frequently affixed their name to their possessions, as at Strathfield-Saye, co. Hants, Hammes-Saye, now Hamsey, in Sussex, &c. The Barons Saye and Sele are of this family.

Scales. Hardouin de Scalers or Scales was a great baron in 1086, whose fief lay in cos. Herts and Cambridge. Hence the barons by writ named Scales, and hence probably Scalé.

Boville, a baronial family from Bouville in the arrondissement of Rouen (Bovis villa). William de B. is mentioned in Domesday as holding lands in Suffolk. The family was afterwards widely scattered over England.

Bulteel, Buletel, Boutell. From Bouteilles in the canton of Offranville, not far from Dieppe. Michael Buletel had lands in Essex, temp. Henry III. (Placit. Abbr.)

Papillon. The name occurs in Normandy and England in the 10th and 11th centuries with the prefix De.

Marais is the name of two or three places in Normandy. Our Marris is evidently a derivative. Marsh is of course an indigenous surname.

Trousbót (now Trusbott) is mentioned by Wace as having been at the battle of Hastings. If his name is that of a Norman locality, I cannot find it. The family were of no note in England till temp. Hen. I. We learn from Ordericus Vital. that the Troussbôts were 'novi homines,' whom that king aggrandized, to the prejudice and discontent of the ancient nobility.

Harcourt. The founder of this family in England was at Hastings. The name is derived from an estate in the arrondissement of Bernai and canton of Brionne, which gave its owners the title to a duchy. Considerable remains of their old fortress existed forty years since, and may exist still. "Les anciens comtes de Harcourt," says Du Bois, "jouent un rôle distingué dans l'Histoire de Normandie." The Earls of Harcourt were no less distinguished in England, (Collins,) and the name still holds a high position amongst us. Harker I take to be a corruption of it.

Grey, anciently De Grai, came from a place near Caen, where the family were settled about 970. The Greys of Rotherfield, the Greys, Earls of Tankerville, and the Earls Grey were descendants.

Crevecœur or Crawcour, a strong castle in the valley of the Ange, in the arrondissement of Lisieux, which was partly remaining not long since. Its lord, according to Wace, was at Hastings. Robert de C. of this family founded Leeds Priory in Kent, 1199. I think Croker is a corruption.

Dives, a seigneurie in the canton to which it gives name. Bosceline de Dive was at the Conquest in 1066, and was estated in Cambridgeshire. (Norm. Peop.)

Daubney and Dobney, corruptions of D'Albini. I find several places in Normandy called Aubigni, formerly Albigni. The family came hither at the Conquest, and the first settlers of the name were Earls of Chichester and Arundel.

Daunay. Du Bois mentions seven places called Aunai in Normandy. The family Latinized themselves. De Alneto, and Wace mentions a Sire d'Alnai at Hastings, from whom descend the Daunays, Viscounts Downe.

Brione, whence as I take it our Bryans, Briants, and the Irish O'Briens, is a place in the canton of its own name, in the arrondissement of Bernai.

Birkbeck, from Briquebec, in the arrondissement of Valognes, described by Du Bois as "bourg important : ancienne baronnie avec haute justice." The name does not occur in our Norman records. "Son château fut repris sur les Anglais en 1450." The date of the settlement in England is unknown.

Elwes. A Galterus Helouis is found in Normandy in 1198. Probably derived from Eloi(s) in the arrondissement of Audeli.

Fagg. Elsewhere I have given a Saxon etymology for this name; but I think it may be Norman, as we find a Simon de Fago in that province in 1198, and the name spelt 'Fegge' occurs in Norfolk in the following year. I cannot help thinking it is connected with the beech-tree, and the first bearers of the name perhaps lived "sub tegmine Fagi." Fage is still an English surname.

Fausset, Fawcet, Fosset. Undoubtedly a Norman importation, whether of local origin I cannot ascertain.

Vaux. Du Bois mentions eight places so called in Normandy = "De Vallibus;" a great family, very influential here in Norman times especially in the North. The late Lord Brougham had his suffixed name, Vaux) from this source.

Ventris. Vintras is found in Normandy at the end of the 12th century. It is probably local.

Venables is a locality in the arrondissement of Louviers. Perhaps so called from vignobles, a vineyard. Gilbert de V. held lands in Cheshire at the compilation of Domesday.

Venus. From Venoix, in the arrondissement of Caen. Families bearing similar names occur in Wilts and Essex in the 12th century.

Cayley. From Cailli, in the canton of Cleres, not far from Rouen. It was anciently a marquisate. At the date of Domesday William de Caigli held lands in Berks. The Baronets Cayley can boast of as distinguished a lineage as any family in England. (See Burke.)

Carvell (Carville) is the name of at least three places in Normandy. As a surname it is found both in that country and in England towards the end of the 12th century.

Ducie. Duci is the name of a place near Bayeux, and of another near Caen. From a descendant of the family in England, the Earl of Ducie presumably derives his lineage.

Gage. From Gaugy, near Rouen. The name occurs there in 1180, and about the same time it is found in Northumberland and Bedford. The name is now represented by the Viscounts Gage, of Firle, Sussex, and the Baronets Gage, of Hengrave, Suffolk. Le Sire de Gaugi was at the battle of Hastings.

Pelham. The family came hither with the Conqueror, under the name of De Bec, from Bec-Crés-pin, famous for its magnificent abbey, in the arrondissement of Havre. It was an ancient barony. On the settlement of the family in England they acquired good lands at Pelham, in Hertfordshire, and thence assumed the name of Pelham.

Percival. Ancestors of the Earls of Egmont. They appear to be a branch of the great Norman family of D'Ivry, originally of Brittany, who trace their pedigree to 890. The original settlement here was in Somerset before 1082.

Cary, originally Pipart, were of Normandy in 1180, but on settling in England had the lands of Kari, and assumed the present name. (Norm. Peop.)

A CHAPTER OF REBUSES.

“ his for Rebus may suffice, and yet if there were, more I think some lippes would like such kind of Lettuce.”—CAMDEN.

THE word REBUS (from the ablative plural of the Latin RES) is accurately defined by Dr. Johnson as “a word represented by a picture.” Camden says that this whimsical mode of representing proper names by objects whose designations separately or conjointly bear the required sound (and which he calls “painted poesies”), was introduced into England from Picardy, after the wars between Edward the Third and the French.

Whatever may be thought of the puerility of hunting out a fanciful picture or device to answer a purpose which the letters of one's name would serve much better, the practice has the sanction of some eminent names in ancient as well as in modern days. Even the great-minded Cicero was not too proud to represent his name by the paltry species of pulse called by us vetches or chick-peas, and by the Romans CICER; and that, too, in a dedication to the gods. Many of the coins of Julius Cæsar bear the impress of an ELEPHANT, as the word cesar signifies that animal in the ancient language of Mauritania.* In like manner the sculptors Saurus and Batrachus carved upon their works, the one the figure of a LIZARD, and the other a FROG, as their names implied;* and two Roman mint-masters distinguished themselves upon the coins struck by them—Florus by a FLOWER, and Vitulus by a CALF.

In that remarkable depository of the remains of the early Christians, the Catacombs at Rome, rebuses were very frequently carved upon the sepulchres. Thus the tomb of Dracontius exhibits a dragon, that of Onager, a wild ass, that of Leo, a lion, that of Doliens, a cask (dolium), and that of Porcella, a little pig. On that of a lady named Navira, is insculped the rude figure of a ship (navis), with an epitaph to the following purport —“NAVIRA IN PEACE—a sweet soul, who lived sixteen years and five months—a soul sweet as honey: this epitaph was made by her parents—the sign, a ship.”†

Having thus seen that there exists ancient and classical authority for the use of rebuses, I shall proceed to set before my reader a dish of “lettuce” culled from the fruitful garden of Master Camden and elsewhere, and which I hope he will find salted and sugared to his palate.

“SIR THOMAS CAVALL, whereas caval signifieth a horse, engraved a galloping horse in his seale, with this limping verse :

“Thomae credite cum cernitis ejus Equum.”

Trust Thomas when you see his Horse.

* Vide Donaldson's Connection between Heraldry and Gothic Architecture, a work to which I am indebted for some other hints concerning rebuses.

† Maitland's Church in the Catacombs, pp. 225-6.

GILBERT DE AQUILA, alias Gislebertus Magnus, alias Gilbert Michel, founder of the priory of Michelham, temp. Henry III., was sometimes styled Dominus Aquilæ, Lord of the Eagle, and his rebus occurs in the shape of an eagle on the corporate seal of the town of Seaford, where he had possessions and influence.

JOHN EAGLESHEAD used as his rebus an eagle's head, surrounded with

"Hoc aquilæ caput est, signumque figura Johannis."

This is the head of an eagle, the seal and badge of John.

The ABBOT OF RAMSAY bore on his seal a ram in the sea, with this verse:

"Cujus signa gero dux gregis ut ego!"

He whose signs I bear is LEADER OF THE FLOCK, as I am.

Abbots, priors, and churchmen generally, were famous fellows for these name-devices, which, like oral puns, may be either apt and good, like those already mentioned, or forced and bad, like the following:

"William CHAUNDLER, warden of New College, Oxford, playing with his owne name, so filled the hall-windowes with candles and these words, Fiat Lux, [Let there be light,] that he darkened the hall; whereupon Vidam of Chartres, when he was there, said it should have been FIANT TENEBRÆ, [Let there be darkness!]" Here the rebus, to be more correct, should have been a candle-maker "drawing his dips," like that of old BARKER, a printer of the sixteenth century, which represents a man with an axe stripping bark from the trunk of a tree.

Some, rebuses were defective, representing only part of the name; as that of Abbot RAMRIDGE on his tomb in St. Alban's Abbey Church, which gives only a ram as in the annexed engraving. Still more defective is that of Abbot WHEAT-

HAMPSTEAD, who presided over the same monastery, and spent six thousand pounds (an immense sum in those days) in adorning the church, in which his device many times occurs: it is three wheat-ears fastened together with a wreath. The rebus of PETER RAMSAM, Abbot of Sherborne, was a text or old English P inclosing a ram and an abbot's crosier. This still remains in Sherborne Church, as also another, viz., a ram holding a scroll inscribed Peter Ramsam.

I have given Abbot RAMRIDGE's imperfect rebus, on the authority of Mr. Donaldson, but an esteemed correspondent, Mr. F. W. Fair-holt, F.S.A., sent me another device of that dignity from the same church of St. Alban's, in which the Ram stands upon a rocky ridge, and holds in his fore-feet an abbatial crosier, to shadow forth the official dignity of that church-decorating worthy, thus making the very best rebus I have yet met with.

The device of John Alcock, founder of Jesus College, Cambridge (and Bishop of Ely), is conspicuous in every part of that college, and is a pun upon his name. It is a cock perched upon a globe, by which latter symbol it is to be presumed the All is adumbrated. On one window was a cock with a label from his mouth, with the inscription, "Εγω εἰμι ἀλέκτωρ ; to which another, on the opposite side, bravely crows in reply, Οὔτως καὶ ἔγω.

I am a Cock! the one doth cry,
And t'other answers, So am I.

TON being a common termination for names of places, and consequently for those of persons, has rendered a tun a favourite ingredient in rebuses, as the following list will show :

ARCHBISHOP THURSTON. A thrush upon a tun. This device still remains upon the ruins of Fountains Abbey, which that prelate founded.

ARCHBISHOP MORTON. The letters MOR upon a tun, and sometimes a mulberry-tree (Latin, morus) issuing out of a tun.

LUTON. A lute upon a tun.

THORNTON. A thorn upon a tun.

ASHTON. An ash-tree issuing from a tun.

BOLTON, prior of St. Bartholomew's in Smithfield. A bird-bolt through a tun.

HUNTINGTON (John), rector of Assheton-under-

Lyme. "An huntsman with dogges whereby hee thought to expresse the two former syllables of his name, Hunting ; on the other syde a vessell called a Tonne, which being ioined together makes Huntington."*

Rebuses are occasionally of great use in determining the dates and founders of buildings. Thus the parsonage-house at Great Snoring, in Norfolk, is only known to have been built by one of the family of SHELTON by the device upon it representing a shell upon a tun.

The REBUS is generally found upon churches and other ecclesiastical buildings. I am inclined to believe that the ecclesiastics had a motive in employing these devices, which lay deeper than a mere playing upon words. It must be recollected that the majority of the persons who frequented the splendid edifices their piety or their vanity had adorned, were unable to read any inscription that might have recorded the benefaction; but these pictorial representations were intelligible to the most illiterate, and served to commemorate to the populace the names of the reverend fathers to whom they stood indebted for the sculptured glories of their houses of worship. Perhaps the general ignorance of the common people accounts for the absence of inscriptions on the sepulchral monuments of early date. Whatever may have been the motive, this omission is very much to be regretted, as all the acumen of learned antiquaries very often fails to assign them to their proper tenants. Very probable conclusions are sometimes arrived at from the heraldic achievements, the costume of the statues with which tombs are adorned, and the posture of those figures ; but the persons commemorated are seldom satisfactorily ascertained.

Sometimes the whole range of visible objects could not furnish a full rebus. In such cases single letters, or even whole words, were adjoined to complete the device. Thus a capital A in a roundlet or rundle was made to do duty for the name of Thomas, Earl of ARUNDEL.

Sir Anthony WINGFELD devised a wing with the letters F. E. L. D. quarterly about it, "and over the wing a crosse to shew he was a Christian, and on the crosse a red rose to shew that he followed the house of Lancaster."

In like manner the old Surrey family of NEWDIGATE used for their seal an ancient portcullised gate with nu at the top, and a capital D in the centre, thus : Nu-D-gate.

Camden tells us of an amorous youth who, in order to express his love for a certain fair damsel named ROSE HILL, painted on the border of his garment lively representations of a rose, a hill, an eye, a loaf, and a well, "that is, if you will spell it,

"ROSE HILL I LOVE WELL!"

Many of the seals of ancient corporations exhibit rebuses on the names of the towns, as Camelford, a camel passing through a ford.

Kingston-upon-Hull, a king between three lions.

Hertford, a hart statant in a ford.

Maidenhead, a maiden's head.

Lancaster (anciently Lun-ceastre), a lion couchant before a castle.

Arundel, a swallow volant (Fr. hirondelle).

Beverley, a beaver, &c.

Lichfield (i.e., the field of corses), the bodies and 'disjecta membra' of dead men, &c.

Oxford, an ox in a ford.

But the oddest local rebus with which I am acquainted is that of Saffron-Walden; three saffron sprigs surrounded by a fortified wall—Saffron walled-in!

Rebuses sometimes occur as signs of inns, as at the antique little village of Warbleton, co. Sussex, where the device is a battle-axe or war-bill thrust into the bung-hole of a tun of foaming ale. In the neighbouring hamlet of Runtington, there was a similar rebus, namely, a runt, or young cow, and a tun. At Crowborough Gate, in the same county, a crow upon a gate does duty for a sign.

Quaint was the conceit of Robert LANGTON, who gave new windows to Queen's College, Oxford (where he received his education), and placed in each of them the letters TON drawn out to a most extraordinary length, or rather breadth, for Lang- (that is Long-) tun; thus:

T O N

"You may imagine," says Master Camden, "that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly inuented to signifie his name, Saint Francis with his Frierly kowle in a corne-field!"*

A hare upon a bottle, for HAREBOTTLE, forms one of the best of these speechless puns. A mag-pie upon a goat, for PIGOT, is very tolerable. As for a hare in a sheaf of rye, standing in the sun, for HARRISON, it is barely passable; but a chest surmounted with a star, for CHESTER, is the ne plus ultra of wretched punning.

Lionel Ducket gave as his rebus a Lion with an L upon his head, "whereas," says Camden, "it should have been in his taile."—"If the Lyon had beene eating a ducke it had beene a rare deuice worth a duckat or a ducke-egge!"

The rebus of Ralph HOGGE or HOGGE (who in conjunction with Peter Baude, a Frenchman, was the first person who cast iron ordnance in England—at the village of Buxted, in Sussex) was a hog. On the front of his residence at that place this device remains carved on stone, with the date 1581; from which circumstance the dwelling is called the "Hog-house." The rebus of one MEDCALF was a calf inscribed with the letters M. E. D. Robert de Eglesfield, the munificent founder of Queen's Coll. Oxon., thought fit to perpetuate his name with what may be called a practical rebus. On Christmas-day, the great annual solemnity of the College, when the boar's head is placed on the hall table with various ceremonies, each of the senior fellows receives from the provost certain needlefulls of purple and scarlet silk, with the admonition, 'Be thrifty:' the French aiguilles et fil (needles and thread) being a play on Eglesfield. The donor's punning was as poor as his liberality was large.

* Remaines, p. 145.

Our old printers were as fond of name-devices in the sixteenth century, as the abbots and priors of the fifteenth had been. Thus William NORTON gave, on the title-pages of the books printed by him, a sweet-William growing out of the bung-hole of a tun, labelled with the syllable NOR; John OXENBRIDGE gave an ox with the letter N on his back, going over a bridge; Hewe GOES, the first printer in the city of York, a great g and a goose! William MIDDLETON gave a capital M in the middle of a tun; Richard GRAFTON, the graft of an apple-tree, issuing from a tun; and GARRET DEWS, two fellows in a garret playing at dice and casting deux! John DAY used the figure of a sleeping boy, whom another boy was awakening, as he pointed to the sun, exclaiming "Arise, for it is day:"* a clumsy invention, scarcely deserving the name of a rebus. Perhaps the most far-fetched device ever used was that of another printer, one Master JUGGE, who "took to express his name a nightingale sitting in a bush with a scrole in her mouth, wherein was written jugge, jugge, jugge!"†

Some printers in recent times have imitated their typographical ancestors by the introduction of their rebus on title-pages. The late Mr. TALBOYS, of Oxford, ensigned all his publications with an axe struck into the stem of a tree, and the motto TAILLE BOIS! Some of Mr. Pickering's books have an antique device representing a pike and a ring.

I have reserved for the last, as being one of the best I have seen, the celebrated rebus of ISLIP, Abbot of

* Vide a plate in Ames's Typogr. Antiq., and in Fosbroke's Encyc. of Antiq.

† Peacham's "Compleat Gentleman."

Westminster, which occurs in several forms in that chapel of the abbey which bears his name. Two copies of this rebus are now before the reader : a description of the one forming our tail-piece will suffice for both. It may be read three ways : first, a human EYE and a SLIP of a tree ; second, a man sliding from the branches of a tree, and of course exclaiming, "I SLIP !" and third, a hand rending off one of the boughs of the same tree, and again re-echoing, "I slip !" Camden, who mentions this quaint device, gives a fourth reading of it, namely, the letter J placed beside the slip, thus again producing the name—ISLIP. Reader, our Lettuce is exhausted !

A CHAPTER OF CANTING ARMS.

WHEN Rebuses are borne by families as coats of arms, they are called, in the language of heraldry, ARMA CANTANTIA, ARMES PARLANTES, or CANTING ARMS. They seem to be in use in most countries where heraldry is known; thus among the French, DU POIRIER bears 'Or, a pear-tree, argent;' among the Italians, COLONNA bears 'Gules, a column, argent;' among the Germans, SCHILSTED bears 'Argent, a sledge, sable.*' The arms of the united houses of CASTILE and LEON are quarterly, a castle and a lion, and those of the province of DAUPHINY, a dolphin. Louis VII. of France (or, as his name was then spelt, Loys) used for his signet a fleur-de-lys, evidently a play upon his name. This was, according to some authorities, the origin of the royal arms of that kingdom.

English Heraldry delights in these punning devices. The arms of ARUNDEL are six swallows, in allusion to the French word hirondelle! and those of CORBET, a raven, referring to the French corbeau, from which the surname is derived. The arms of TOWERS are 'Azure, a tower, Or;,' those of DE LA CHAMBRE, 'Argent, a chevron, &c., between three chamber-pieces, proper; * those of BRAND, Lord Dacre, 'two brands (or swords) in saltire argent; ' those of COOTE, ' Argent, a chevron between three coots, sable; ' those of HERON, ' Azure, three herons, proper; ' those of OXENDEN, ' Argent, a chevron between three oxen, sable; ' those of BURDETT, six birds (martlets); those of HAZELRIGG, three hazel-leaves; those of HARTWELL, a hart; those of BROKE, a brock, or badger; those of MILNE, three windmill sails; those of COLT, ' Argent, a fesse between three colts, current sable; ' those of CONINGSBY, ' Gules, three conies, sejant argent; ' those of STARKEY, a stork; those of URSON, a bear (in Latin ursa); those of LAROCHE, ' Or, a rock, sable; those of SHELLEY, ' Sable, a fesse engrailed between three whelk shells, Or; ' those of WOOD, ' Argent, a tree, proper; ' those of DOLFIN, ' Azure, three dolphins naiant,

* Chamber-pieces, a species of small cannons. The various kinds of artillery in use amongst our ancestors bore the most singular names. There were cannons and demy-cannons, curtall-cannons and robinets, culverins and demy-culverins, calivers and fowlers, fawcons and fawconets, dragons and basilisks, sakers and petronels, chambers and jakers, harquebusses, dags, and pistols! "This," says a writer of the age of Elizabeth, "is the artillerie which is now in most estimation." How many more kinds there might be I am unable to say, but the above catalogue seems sufficiently numerous. Most of the above terms are calculated to inspire a degree of terror, being derived from the names of monsters, serpents, and birds of prey. Culverin is from the Fr. couleuvrine, a snake—and faucons, fauconnets, sakers, &c., were various species of birds used in hawking. Dragons, basilisks, &c., need no explanation.

Or;' those of WHALLEY, 'Argent, three whales' heads erased, sable;' those of MAUNSELL, 'Argent, a chevron between three maunches (ancient sleeves), sable;' those of DOBELL, 'Sable, a doe passant between three bells, argent;' and those of TREBAREFOOT, ('of that Ilk' in the county of Cornwall,) 'Sable, a chevron, Or, between three bears' feet;' those of HARRISON, a hedgehog, in

French herisson;' those of BLACKMORE, 'Argent, a fesse between three blackmoors' heads erased, sable;' those of CROSS contain a cross-crosslet; those of KNIGHTLEY, a lance; those of SHAKSPEARE and BREAKSPEARE, a spear; those of FEATHERSTONEHAUGH, three feathers; those of FLETCHER, four arrow-heads; those of HUNTER, three hunting horns; those of RAMSDEN, three rams' heads; and those of MERRYWEATHER, a sun and three martlets, indicative of merry weather! The family of GRANDORGE (grain d'orge—barley grain) bear three ears of barley.

It has been a fashion among modern heraldrists to decry this species of bearings as beneath the dignity of heraldry; and some have even placed them in the list of what are called Assumptive Arms, that is, such as have been assumed at the caprice of individuals, to gratify personal vanity, without the sanction of the heralds. It is worthy of a parenthetical remark, here, that as heraldry is far more ancient than the collegiate body now possessed of the government of matters armorial, and even than the existence of royally-authorized heralds, all the arms borne by our older and more eminent families are assumptive. Every chieftain in baronial times took such emblems as pleased him best, and there was nothing to prevent the adoption of such as conveyed some allusion to his name. Indeed, our oldest heraldic documents, the celebrated Rolls of Arms of the thirteenth and following centuries, abound with Arma Cantantia ;* and all our later heraldry, as well as that of foreign nations, is more or less of this punning character.† Among the arms granted by the illustrious Camden, whose taste will scarcely be called in question, are many which allude to the surnames of the respective grantees.‡ At the same time it is fully admitted that at some periods, and more particularly during the seventeenth century, many absurdities in this respect were perpetrated ; and it might be wished that even recent heraldry were exempt from this charge of bad taste. No longer since than 1830, the College of Arms granted to Mr. NEHEMIAH WIMBLE, of Lewes, the following ‘achievement :’ “ARMS, Ermine on a pile gules, a lion of England in chief, and a wimble in base ; over all a fesse, chequy, or and azure, thereon two escallops, sable. Crest, a demi-lion rampant, chequy, or and azure, supporting an ancient shield gules, charged with the chemical character for Mars, or.” The circumstances under which the grant was made were these. Their majesties, King William the Fourth and Queen Adelaide, on paying a visit to their ancient borough of Lewes, were loyally received by the townsmen, and entertained at Mr. Wimble’s mansion called the Friars. On this occasion the worthy proprietor was honoured with an introduction to the royal pair, and the grant of arms followed. This "modern instance" is full of the allusiveness so much objected to by the lovers of simple and non-emblematical heraldry, albeit a knowledge of several local and personal circumstances is necessary to a due perception of some of the allusions. In the first place, the grantee's name was Wimble, which is represented by the cooper's tool so designated; secondly, he lived at Lewes, a fact indicated by the chequered fesse, borrowed from the borough arms; thirdly, as we have seen, the reception of the king and queen took place at his residence; hence the ROYAL LION in chief; fourthly, he was an eminent ironmonger, a circumstance shadowed forth by the "chemical character for Mars,"—or Iron, on the "ancient shield;" fifthly, Mr. Wimble's house was ordinarily occupied by the judges during the assizes, and hence the ermine! There yet remains one feature of the arms unappropriated, namely, the escallop shells. The escallop is a religious emblem, and probably refers to the name of the house, the Friars, so called from its having anciently been a monastery of Grey Friars, if, indeed, as a badge of pilgrimage, it does not refer to the eight miles' pilgrimage of their majesties from the Pavilion at Brighton to their ancient and loyal town of Lewes! Risum teneatis amici?

But to give some other instances of heraldic rebuses; the family of OAKES bear acorns (very natural that they should); the BUTLERS, of Ireland, bear three covered cups (very proper again); the LAMBS, three lambs ; the ROACHES, three roaches ; the BACONS, a boar ; the PINES, a fir-tree or pine ; the PARKERS, a stag's head ; the CALLS, three trumpets. Sometimes the crest cants when the arms do not ; this is the case in the family of BEEVOR, a beaver ; ASHBURNHAM, an ash-tree ; BECKFORD, a heron's head holding in his strong beak (Bec fort) a fish ; FISHER, a kingfisher, &c.

Canting arms are common in Scotland as well as in England. The arms of MATTHIAS are three dice (sixes, as the highest throw), having no doubt a reference to the election of St. Matthias to the apostleship ; “and the lot fell upon Matthias.” “The arms of LOCKHART are ‘A man's heart, proper, within a padlock, sable,’ in perpetuation, as they tell you, that one of the name accompanied the good Sir James Douglas to Jerusalem, with the heart of King Robert the Bruce.”* The following are also from Scottish heraldry : CRAW, three crows ; FRASER, three frases or cinquefoils ; FALCONER, a falcon ; FORESTER, three bugle-horns ; HEART, three human hearts ; HOGG, three boars' heads ; JUSTICE, a sword in pale, supporting a balance ; PEACOCK, a peacock ; SKENE, three daggers, called in Scotland skenes ; and BANNERMAN, ‘a banner displayed argent ; on a canton azure, St. Andrew's cross.’

The LUCYS of Warwickshire bore luces or pike ; three, however—

The arms of Sir WILLIAM SEVENOKE or SENNOCKE were seven acorns, 3, 3, and 1. This remarkable person was deserted by his parents in infancy, and found either in the hollow of a tree, or in the street, at Sevenoaks, co. Kent, towards the end of the reign of Edw. III. By the charitable assistance of Sir William Rumpstead (the person who found him) and others, he was brought up, and apprenticed in London, where being admitted to the freedom of the Grocers' Company, he gradually rose in eminence, until at length he became Lord Mayor, which office he served with great honour in the 6th year of Henry V., and received from that monarch the honour of knighthood. Three years afterwards he served in parliament for the city of London. He was a benefactor to the parish of St. Dunstan in the East, and also to the place whence he received his name, for "calling to minde the goodness of Almighty God, and the favour of the Townesmen extended towards him, he determined to make an everlasting monument of his thankfull minde for the same. And therefore of his owne charge builded both an Hospitall for reliefe of the poor, and a free Schoole for the education of youthe within this towne, &c."* He made his will in 1432, and was buried in the Church of St. Martin, Ludgate.

NOTE TO PAGE 114.

ARMS OF ASSUMPTION. It is rather surprising that some heraldrists, official and otherwise, should question the validity of all those armorial bearings which are not authenticated by a grant of the College. As I have already asserted, comparatively few families of ancient gentry have any record of the exact date of their arms, or of their having been conferred in a legal manner. The College of Arms is of no older date than the reign of Richard the Third. Prior to that time coat-armour was sometimes the immediate gift of royalty, but oftener conferred by commanders on such as had earned it by valour on the battle-field; or given by noblemen to those who held estates under them and followed their banners. Camden says, "Whereas the earles of Chester bare garbes or wheat-sheafes, many gentlemen of that countrey tooke wheat-sheafes. Whereas the old earles of Warwicke bare chequy, or and azure, a cheueron ermin, many thereabout tooke ermine and chequie. In Leicestershire and the countrey confining, diuers bare cinquefoyles, for that the antient earles of Leicester bare geules, a cinquefoyle, ermine. In Cumberland and thereabouts, where the old barons of Kendall bare argent two barres geules, and a lyon passant or, in a canton of the second, many gentlemen thereabout took the same in different colours and charges in the canton." A variety of other instances of this practice may be found in the "Curiosities of Heraldry," and in many historical, topographical, and genealogical publications.* A more copious collec-

* Lambarde's Perambulation of Kent, p. 520. Quibbling old Fuller says, "he gave Seven Acorns for his armes, which, if they grow as fast in the Field of Heraldry as in the common field, may be presumed to be oaks at this day."—Worthies, vol. i. p. 509.

* It would seem that the practice of borrowing the arms of other families is not yet extinct, for a certain plebeian high-sheriff of Sussex, not many years since, on being asked by his coachmaker what arms he would have painted on his new carriage, replied: "Oh, I don't care—suppose we have Lord Chichester's—I think they're as pretty as any!" Nor is it altogether confined to our eastern hemisphere, if the following anecdote may be relied on. An English gentleman at New York sent his carriage to a certain coach-maker for repairs, with an intimation that he would call in a few days to view the progress of the work. Judge of his surprise, on entering the coach-maker's workshop, to find some half-dozen other carriages besides his own, bedizened with his family arms. When he demanded of the coachmaker an explanation of this "heraldic anomaly," that worthy replied with genuine sim-tion of such borrowed arms than has yet been made, would form materials for a curious and interesting chapter in the history of armory.

plicity: "Why you see, Mister, several of my customers who have been in to look at their carriages have ordered me to copy the arms from yours; for let me tell you," he added, in a patronizing manner, "it's a pattern that's very much liked!"

OF PUNNING FAMILY MOTTOES.

OME families, not content with painting their surnames upon their escutcheons, in the shape of 'canting' arms, have, moreover, re-echoed them in their mottoes.

The motto of the family of Piereponte (Duke of Kingston) is PIE REPONE TE, a capital hit, as the three words make the name almost exactly. FORTE-SCUTum Salus Ducum, the motto of the Fortescues, has already been mentioned. The family of ONSLow use Festina lente, "On slow!" or "Hasten slowly." The windows at Chiddingly Place, co. Sussex, the seat of the Jefferays, formerly contained their arms and motto, Je-ffray ce que diray.

I shall do what I say!

Sir John Jefferay, lord chief baron (temp. Eliz.), who was of this family, used the shorter motto, Que fra " je fra."

The CAVENDISHES use Cavendo tutus, "Safety in caution;" the FANES, Ne vile fano, "Bring nothing base to the fane, or temple;" the MAYNARDS, MA-nus justa NARDus, "A just hand is a precious ointment;" the COURTHOPES, Court Hope; the FAIRFAXES, Fare, fac, “Speak, do;” the VERNONS, Ver non semper viret, “The spring does not always flourish,” or “Vernon always flourishes;” the FITTONS, “Fight on quoth Fitton;” the SMITHS, “Smite quoth Smith;” and the MANNS, Homo sum, “I am a man!” the NEVILLES, NE VILE velis, “Incline to nothing base;” the AGARDES, Dieu me GARDE, “God defend me;” and the LOCKHARTS, CORDA SERATA pando, “I lay open the locked hearts.” The ancient family of Morrice, of Betshanger, co. Kent, who trace their genealogy to Brut, the first King of Britain, (!) have for their motto “Antiqui MORES.” Many of the Scottish mottoes originated in the slug-horn, slogan, or war-cry of the clan of which the bearer was chief. Thus the motto of SETON, Earl of Wintoun, is Set-on! being at once an exhortation to the retainers to set upon the enemy, and a play upon the name.

The motto of John WELLS, last abbot of Croyland, engraved upon his chair, which is still extant, is

OF ANAGRAMS.

"I believe now, there is some secret power and virtue in names."

BURTON'S Anatomy of Melancholy.

S my motto is, "What's in a Name?" a few words on ANAGRAMS cannot be out of place here. Few people are aware of what their names really include; for they unquestionably contain a deal of mysterious wisdom did we but know how to extract it. As for myself, I am one of those "dull wyttes" who might as well hunt for a statue of Apollo in a block of marble, as try to extract what Camden calls the 'quintessence' of names. I must therefore rest content to be a compiler, that is to say, literally, a robber of the produce of more fertile geniuses.

"Anagrammatisme or metagrammatisme" (forgive me 'shade of the venerable Camden,' if I, for the hundredth time, again rob you), "is a dissolution of a name truly written into his Letters, as his Elements, and a new connexion of it by artificiall transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named."*

* Remaines, p. 147.

“Some of the sowre sort will say it (namely the searching out of anagrams) is nothing but a troublous ioy, and because they cannot attaine to it will condemne it, least by commending it, they should discommend themselves. Others more milde, will grant it to bee a dainty deuīs and disport of wit not without pleasure, if it be not wrested out of the name to the reproach of the person. And such will not deny but that as good names may bee ominous, so also good Anagrammes, with a delightfull comfort and pleasant motion in honest minds, in no point yeelding to any vaine pleasures of the body. They will also afford it some commendations in respect of the difficulty (Difficilia quæ pulchra); as also that it is the whetstone of patience to them that shall practise it. For some haue beene seene to bite their pen, scratch their head, bend their browes, bite their lips, beate the boord, teare their paper, when they were faire for somewhat, and caught nothing therein.”

The invention of anagrams is ascribed to a Greek poet called Lycophron, who flourished about B.C. 380, in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, whose name he proved to be full of sweetness, ΠΤΟΛΕΜΑΙΟΣ.

‘Απὸ μέλιτος—Made of honey!

Nor was he less successful upon that of Arsinoe, Ptolemy’s wife, which he thus read :

ΑΡΣΙΝΟΗ.

‘Ηρας Ιου—Juno’s violet!

The practice of making anagrams was first used in modern times in France, upon the revival of learning in that country under Francis the First. Not long after, the following transpositions were made of the name of the unfortunate Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland :

MARIA STUARTA.

Veritas Armata.

Armed Truth.

This, however, does not come up to Camden's rule of "making a perfect sense applicable to the person named." The next is much better :

Maria Stewarda, Scotorum Regina.

TRUSA VI REGNIS, MORTE AMARA CADDO.

Thrust by force from my kingdoms, I fall by a bitter death !

It is to the French also that we are indebted for the beautiful anagram on the name of Christ which has an allusion to the passage in Isaiah LVIII., "He is brought as a sheep to the slaughter."

IHSOTΣ.

Σú η̃ õis—Thou art that sheep.

Anagrams, on their introduction into this country, were often employed for the purposes of flattery. Camden cites several, made in his own times, on the names of James the First and his family, which do not, according to my view of that race, conform to his own rule. I shall pass by these and many others my author has given, and come at once to notice a few of the best I have met with upon English names.

Among these is that upon

“DOROTHY, VICOUNTESSE LISLE.

Christ joins true love's knot.

Where hands and hearts in sacred linke of love
Are joyn'd in Christ, that match doth happy prove.”

Of the name of SIR FRANCIS BACON, LORD KEEPER, one Mr. Tash, an ‘especial man in this faculty,’ made—

Is born and elect for a ric[h] speaker.

Of that of JOHANNES WILLIAMS, the Welsh divine and statesman, well known as the strenuous opponent of Laud, Mr. Hugh Holland made a quadruple anagram, which, however, is far from exact :

1. IO SIS LUMEN IN AULA.

O, mayst thou be a light in the palace !

2. My wall is on high.

3. My wall high Sion.

And (in reference to his love for the country that gave him birth)

4. WALLIS ES IN ANIMO.

O Wales how I love thee !

Honest JOHN BUNYAN found out the following for his anagram, which, albeit somewhat defective and rough, is highly characteristic of the man :

John Bunyan.

NU HONY IN A B !

The anagram on Monk, afterwards Duke of Albemarle, on the restoration of Charles II., included an important date in our history :

GEORGIUS MONKE, DUX DE ALBEMARLE.

*Ego Regem reduxi, Anº. Sa. MDCLVV.

I brought back the King in the year 1660.

Anagram-making seems to have been the favourite amusement of wits and scholars in the seventeenth century, and every name of note was found to contain what would least be expected from it. Those indeed were the days for seeking 'what's in a name.' By a slight transposition a Wit was found in WIAT, Renoun in VERNON, and Lawrel in WALLER. RANDLE HOLMES, the heraldic writer, was complimented with

LO, MEN'S HERALD !

My 'speciall good friend,' 'Henry Peacham, M^r. of Arts,' the Chesterfield of that period, in his 'Compleat Gentleman,' gives the following advice: "In your discourse be free and affable, giving entertainment in a sweet and liberall manner, and with a cheerful courtesy, seasoning your talk at the table, among grave and serious discourses, with conceits of wit and pleasant invention, as ingenious epigrams, emblems, Anagrams, merry tales, and witty questions and answers." He then proceeds to give 'a tast of some of his (own) Anagrams, such as they are,' one or two of which I shall copy.

"Being requested by a noble and religious lady,

* D'Israeli, Curiosities of Literature, vol. iii. p. 209.

who was sister to the old lord De la Ware, to try what her name would afford, it gave me this :

JANE WEST.

En tua, Jesu."

"Upon a sweet and modest young gentlewoman, Mistris

MARIA MEUTAS.

Tu à me amaris."

"Of a virtuous and fair gentlewoman, at the request of my friend who bare her good will :

FRANCIS (sic) BARNEY.

Bars in fancy.

And this—

Theodosia Dixon.

ADEO DIXIT HONOS ; or

O Dea, dixit honos."

"Of my good friend Master Doctor Dowland, in regard he had slipt many opportunities of advancing his fortunes ; and a rare lutenist as any of our nation—beside one of our greatest masters of musick for composing : I gave him an emblem with this :

JOHANNES DOULANDUS.

Annos ludendi hausì."

Thus much from H. Peacham, who must be confessed to be a 'Mr.' of this art quite unimpeachable.

Few anagrams have been more happy than that on

Lord Nelson, made by the Rev. William Holden, rector of Chatteris:—

HORATIO NELSON.

Honor est à Nilo.

My honour is from the Nile.

It would be an easy matter to extend this gossip over many pages, but I must refer the reader who wishes for more of it to the teeming chapters of Camden and D'Israeli. There is, however, an anecdote connected with anagrammatizing which although 'decies repetita, placebit.'

"LADY ELEANOR DAVIES, the wife of the celebrated Sir John Davies, the poet, was a very extraordinary character. She was the Cassandra of her age, and several of her predictions warranted her to conceive she was a prophetess. As her prophecies in the troubled times of Charles I. were usually against the government, she was at length brought by them into the Court of High Commission. The prophetess was not a little mad, and fancied the spirit of Daniel was in her, from an anagram she had formed of her name,

ELEANOR DAVIES,

Reveal O Daniel!

The anagram had too much by an L and too little by an s; yet Daniel and reveal were in it, and this was sufficient to satisfy her inspirations. The court attempted to dispossess the spirit from the lady, while the bishops were in vain reasoning the point with her out of the Scriptures, to no purpose, she poisoning text against text: one of the Deans of Arches, says Heylin, ‘shot her thorough and thorough with an arrow borrowed from her own quiver:’ he took a pen, and at last hit upon this excellent anagram:

DAME ELEANOR DAVIES.

Never so mad a Ladie!

“The happy fancy put the solemn court into laughter, and Cassandra into the utmost dejection of spirit. Foiled by her own weapons, her spirit suddenly forsook her; and either she never afterwards ventured on prophesying, or the anagram perpetually reminded her hearers of her state—and we hear no more of this propheticess.”*

Drummond of Hawthornden passed a severe sentence on this species of wit, when he said, “Except eteostiques, I think the Anagram the most idle study in the world of learning. Their maker must be homo miserrimae patientiae, and when he is done what is it but magno conatu nugas magnas agere! you may of the same name make both good and evil.” Happy, therefore, in the poet’s estimation, was that countryman of his, whose mistress’s name being Anna Grame, contained a ready-made and most unexceptionable Anagram!

A few more “last words.” A friend of mine, the late Thomas Dicker, Esq., favoured me with two specimens of his own construction, which have so much of the spirit of true metagrammatism in them, that I am sure I shall be pardoned the introduction of them here.

After the battle of Navarino, Admiral Sir Edward Codrington having made some reflections discreditable

* Curiosities of Literature, vol. iii. pp. 212-13.

to the reputation of Capt. R. Dickenson in that affair, Capt. Dickenson demanded a court-martial, the result of which was not only his honourable acquittal, but the most complimentary testimony of the court to his high professional merit. This circumstance gave rise to the anagram below, on the name of

SIR EDWARD CODRINGTON.

Rd. Dic'enson got reward.

When Mr. George Thomson, the eloquent anti-slavery advocate, was solicited, some years since, to go into Parliament, with a view to his more efficiently serving the cause of negro emancipation, the question being submitted to the consideration of his friends Mr. Dicker found the following answer in the letters of his name :

GEORGE THOMPSON.

O go—the Negro's M.P. !

Perhaps the oddest mode of expressing a name ever seen was that made use of by one of the family of Noel :

“ ABCDEFGHIJKMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ.”—No-‘ L.’

REMARKS ON INN SIGNS.

“ ——— vestigia pressit,
Observans quæ Signa ferant!”

ÆN. vi. 197.

FROM the eleventh chapter of my Essay it will be seen how fertile a source of English Surnames the Signs of innkeepers and other traders have been. Some years since, I began to prepare for the press a separate treatise on this subject; but having been hitherto prevented from carrying my design into execution, it has occurred to me that a short dissertation, showing its connection with Heraldry and Surnames, might not be unacceptable to the readers of these volumes.

I have already said that in former times signs were not exclusively limited to inns. Every shopkeeper, or nearly so, had his sign, emblematical in most instances of the wares to be disposed of. In this place, however, it is my intention to confine my remarks to those of taverns and inns. A history of inns, ancient and modern, would be a curious contribution to our literature; though it would be foreign to my present purpose. Without further preface I shall proceed to classify the medieval and modern signs of these useful establishments.

There are seven principal classes of signs, each of which is susceptible of subdivisions, viz.:

- I. Those of a Religious Origin.
- II. Those derived from Heraldry.
- III. Those referring to Distinguished Personages.
- IV. Those which are emblematical of Inns.
- V. Those referring to particular Trades.
- VI. Those allusive to Sports and Pastimes.
- VII. Miscellaneous.

In the middle ages, inns were comparatively rare. The benevolence and hospitality of the monasteries rendered them to a great extent unnecessary. Travelers of all grades repaired to the abbeys and priories for rest and refreshment, and the largesses of the wealthier sort enabled the monks to furnish gratuitous entertainment and lodging to wayfarers of an humbler degree. The practice of going on pilgrimage to distant celebrated shrines led to the erection of wayside inns for the use of the devotees. Hence obviously arose our first class—namely, signs of a Religious character.

Chief among these is the symbol of our faith—the Cross, formerly a much more common sign than at present. When described as the Golden, the Red, or the White Cross, it probably belongs to those borrowed from armorial insignia. The Cross-in-Hand may be as ancient as the Crusades. The Holy Rood, a representation of Christ upon the cross, with Mary and John standing by, is now almost obsolete as a sign. Before the Reformation, every church had its rood occupying a kind of gallery, called the rood-loft, before the chancel arch. Rood and Roods, I may observe, are used as surnames. The Lamb is a common sign. It was formerly the Holy Lamb, bearing the cross. In the earlier and purer days of Christianity, the sacred passion was represented by a simple cross, or by a cross ensigned by XP, the first two letters of Χριστός. To this symbol was added, about the year 400, a white lamb at the foot of the cross. In 706, the lamb was superseded by a figure of the Saviour, standing with extended arms, as if in prayer, but it was not until the tenth century that this figure was represented dead and nailed to the transverse beam, as in the modern crucifix.* The Holy Lamb, however, was still occasionally represented in illuminations and sculpture, and it is yet retained in the armorial bearings of several families.

The Maiden's Head may sometimes refer to the Virgin Mary, though it is otherwhile regarded as a representation of one of the eleven thousand virgins of Catholic fable. This sign has also become a surname as Maidenhead. The Salutation was originally a painting or sculpture of the Annunciation—the appearance of the angel to Mary with the memorable words, Ave Maria, Dominus tecum, &c. An inn in London bearing this sign corrupted it in a most ludicrous manner. The original meaning of the expression having been forgotten, the new sign-board exhibited two gentlemen in tailed coats in the act of salutation by shaking hands!

The Saints frequently occur as signs. The St. George and Dragon is familiar to all. The St. Andrew, the Baptist's Head, the Christopher, the St. Dunstan, the St. Helena, are far less frequent. The Catherine Wheel, and the Gridiron refer to the martyrdoms of SS. Catherine and Lawrence. The Blossoms, a considerable inn in London, was so called from its ancient sign, which represented St. Lawrence within a border of blossoms or flowers. The legend of this Saint states that flowers sprang up upon the spot of his martyrdom.

* Vide Maitland's Church in the Catacombs, p. 204.

The Mitre, the Cross Keys, the Cardinal's Cap (at Canterbury), the Friars, and the Monk's Head, indicate the influence of the priestly order in their respective localities.

The Bishop Blaize is a popular ale-house sign in the clothing counties. St. Blaize was bishop of Sebaske in Cappadocia, and is said to have visited England, and to have settled at a place in Cornwall, designated after him, St. Blazey. He suffered martyrdom in 289, by beheading, after his flesh had been cruelly lacerated with iron combs; and from this latter incident he was selected as the tutelary saint of the wool-combers.*

The signs representing scriptural subjects are less common than formerly; among those still retained are Adam and Eve, The Two Spies,† Bel and the Dragon, often corrupted to the Bell and Dragon, and Simon the Tanner. Mr. Roby considers the Adam and Eve a vestige of “Those shows which once profaned the sacred page,

The barbarous ‘Mysteries’ of our infant stage”—

* Roby.

† The original sign probably represented not the two spies sent to Jericho by Joshua, but the two faithful spies, Joshua and Caleb, bearing the cluster of grapes—to indicate that good wine might be had within.

in which the first parents of mankind were dramatis personæ. Stowe tells us that the 'Creation of the World' was acted at Clerkenwell, in 1409, by the Company of Parish-clerks, and the representation lasted eight days. So lately as the year 1600, in one of the Chester Whitsun plays or moralities (!) Adam and Eve appear on the stage without the slightest apology for vestments of any kind.

The Devil and St. Dunstan was a favourite subject among medieval painters and sculptors. The 'foul fiend Sathanas' was pourtrayed, however, in all the deformity of claw, tail, and horn, and utterly divested of the assumed form of a 'faire ladie,' under which he presented himself to the Saint upon the memorable occasion of the legend :

"Saynet Dunstane, as y^e storie goes,
Once seized y^e Deville by y^e nose,
Hee tugged soe harde and made hym rore
That he was heerd thre myles and more."

The tongs with which this feat was performed, together with the hammer and anvil which the Christian Vulcan was using at the time of the temptation, are carefully preserved at Mayfield Palace, co. Sussex, where the scene is alleged to have occurred. St. Dunstan's Bridge, in the same vicinity, is pointed out as the spot where the fiend succeeded in making his escape from the saintly grasp. The holy man, nothing daunted, took a few miles' walk to Tunbridge, in order to quench his tongs, which he did by dipping them into the Wells there; and lo! to this day, those wells retain the ferruginous taste thus imparted.

Per antithesin, we may next mention the sign of the Angel. In ecclesiastical architecture, angels supporting shields are of very common occurrence, as corbels and trusses. After the Reformation, religious edifices were sometimes converted into houses of entertainment; and a carved ornament of this kind, upon such an inn, may have suggested the sign. The well-known combat of St. Michael the Archangel and the Dragon, must not be overlooked as an extremely probable origin of it.*

CLASS II.—The signs borrowed from Heraldry are, perhaps, more numerous than those derived from all other sources collectively.

The full armorials of a family form one of the most usual classes of inn signs, as the Neville Arms,

* Many of these religious signs are still to be found at Paris and in other continental cities. The following are from a list kindly collected for me by John Sikes, Esq. :—

A l'annonciation.	Au Père Eternel.
A l'enfant Jésus. This is over a	A la tentation.
wine-shop, together with the	A la grâce de Dieu.
monogram I H S.	Au St. Esprit; with a golden dove.

Nothing can justify the use of such sacred names for so profane a purpose. Diabolical signs are extremely abundant; e.g.

Au diable à Paris.	Au pauvre diable.
Maison des pauvres diables.	Au fils de diable.

Others are in honour of the saints :—

Au petit St. Thomas.	Au grand St. Michel.
A Ste. Marie.	A la Vierge.
A l'image St. Louis.	A l'image Nôtre Dame,

&c., &c., &c.

Dorset Arms, Sergison Arms, Shelley Arms, Pelham Arms. These are abundant in every locality, and point out the local or political influence of the family so honoured. The King's Arms designates a host of inns. The arms of places are also common, as the County Arms, City Arms, Town Arms, Cinque-Port Arms; Kent Arms, Sussex Arms, Lewes Arms, &c., &c. The armorials of the trading companies of London are often employed, as the Bricklayers' Arms, Carpenters' Arms, Blacksmiths' Arms; and arms are often 'found' for callings not recognized in this kind of heraldry, as the Fisherman's Arms, Founders' Arms, Marine Arms, Miners' Royal Arms, Odd Fellows' Arms, with some others still more absurd, to which I have previously alluded.* I do not imagine that this class of signs is of any great antiquity, and as it cannot, from its very nature, have given rise to any surnames, I shall pass on to another; namely, signs derived from heraldic CHARGES and FIGURES, which have greatly enlarged our family nomenclature.

These were originally derived from the most conspicuous feature of the arms of noble families, and from royal and other badges, supporters, and crests; and may be classified into—

1. Parts of the human figure.
2. Quadrupeds.
3. Birds.
4. Fishes, &c.
5. Vegetable productions.
6. Inanimate objects.

* See also some further remarks upon heraldic Inn Signs in Curios. of Herald., p. 186.

1. Parts of the Human Figure.—The Saracen's Head, the Turk's Head, and the Blackmoor's Head point to the period of the Crusades, when such charges were first introduced into the arms of eminent Christian heroes. The first is still retained in the achievements of the families of Bouchier, Darrell, Shirley, and others; and the third is allusively employed in those of the families of Blackmore, Moore, &c. The Three Legs occurs at Uxbridge. This is probably the singular ensign of the Isle of Man, anciently quartered by the Stanleys, Earls of Derby, and sovereigns of the island; and may have been adopted as a sign in compliment to some member of that family. In one instance, the entire human figure is given as a sign—the Black Boy, which was probably borrowed from the supporters of some noble family. The King's Head, Duke's Head, &c., belong to another class.

2. Quadrupeds.

LION. Black Lion, Blue Lion, Red Lion, White Lion, Golden Lion, Silver Lion.

HORSE. White Horse, Black Horse, Running Horse ('horse courant'). The White Horse rampant is the arms of Kent, the old Saxon ensign.

BEAR. White Bear, Brown Bear, Black Bear. These colours are all 'proper' to the bear, according to the species. The bear is a common heraldic charge, and on signs he is usually represented muzzled and chained. Why the bear should have become a favourite badge of the warrior's shield, it is somewhat difficult to conjecture, though it must be allowed to be a better emblem of his prowess than some other animals, such as the monkey, the ass, and the toad, which found their way into the quaint heraldry of early times. The Bear and Ragged Staff, which occurs as an inn sign, is the badge of the Earls of Warwick.

“ Old Neville’s crest

The Rampant Bear chained to the Ragged Staff.”

BOAR. The wild boar seems to have been an ancient sign: hence the surname Wildbore. The White Boar was the badge of King Richard III. The Blue Boar was another Yorkist badge, and thus, as it became associated with royalty, the Blue Boar and Crown was a rather common sign. This serves to explain what might otherwise appear a very absurd combination of objects. On a road-side inn, near Tunbridge Wells, this sign is oddly corrupted to the Blue Boy and Crown! The Hog in Armour was probably derived from the rhinoceros.

DOG. Talbot, Black Dog, Greyhound, common in heraldry.

BULL. Black Bull, Pied Bull, Bull’s Head. An eminent example of this heraldic bearing occurs in the family of Neville.

ANTELOPE. This was anciently a royal supporter.

BUCK. Stag, Doe, Roebuck, Hart (Surnames), Buck’s Head, White Hart. The last was a badge of the Lancastrian branch of the house of Plantagenet; and it is a curious fact that the sign is still most common in those districts where the “time-honoured” duke and his descendants had the greatest influence.

FOX. The 'Fox and Grapes' refers to the classical fable. The 'Cross Foxes' I take to be merely the singular armorial bearings of the family of Williams (Wynne), which are blazoned thus: "Argent, two foxes, counter-salient in saltier, gules."

GOAT. Goat's Head. Among the ludicrous associations frequently found in inn signs are the Goat in Boots and the Goat and Compasses. The latter is said to be a corruption of the words, "God encompasseth us," which a puritanical innkeeper inscribed upon his house.

RAM. Usually heraldic, with golden horns and hoofs.

UNICORN. The sinister supporter of the royal arms.

ELEPHANT. Elephant and Castle.*

3. Birds.

EAGLE. Black Eagle, Golden Eagle, Spread Eagle (eagle displayed). The Eagle and Child is the crest of the Stanleys, Earls of Derby, and originated in a fabulous legend respecting the preservation of an ancestor of the family, in infancy, by an eagle.† The sable eagle with two heads, the imperial ensign of Russia, is corrupted to the Split Crow!!

SWAN. White Swan, Black Swan (rara avis in signis!). 'The Swan with two Necks': for necks read

* Similar signs from heraldry occur at Paris, as "Au lion d'argent," "au renard bleu," "aux trois agneaux d'or," "au bras d'or," "au chien rouge," &c.

† Curios. of Heraldry, p. 188.

nicks. A nick is the mark cut in the mandible of a swan to distinguish its ownership on rivers and other common waters, where large numbers belonging to different persons congregate. In these instances certain 'swan-marks' have been immemorially in use; and, from one of these, the sign, thus curiously corrupted, takes its origin.

COCK. Cock and Pye (magpie), Cock and Bottle.

A correspondent has sent me the following funny anecdote. The servant of a certain Bishop bought an inn called 'The Cock,' and, out of zeal for his olim master, changed the sign to 'the Bishop's Head,' setting up a striking bewigged likeness of the said Head over his door. Some time after, it struck a rival innkeeper in the place that it might answer his purpose to call his inn 'the Cock,' so misleading the public to think it was the original establishment. To prevent so injurious a result, the old innkeeper instantly painted in large letters beneath the Bishop's head, "THIS IS THE 'OLD' COCK!"

FALCON. Castle and Falcon: evidently a family crest.

OWL.

PEACOCK. At St. Albans are the Old Peacock and the Pea-Hen.

PIGEONS. 'Three Jolly Pigeons:' evidently the arms of some family. Three doves are found in those of Duffeld, Ayer, Thevenge, and Marmaduke.

PHEASANT.

CROW. The 'Royston Crow' in Hertfordshire.

MOOR-HEN. Three Moor Hens, at Hoddesdon, Herts: the arms of some family. The same may be said of the Three Stags. The Three Daws, at Gravesend, should probably be Cornish choughs, a very common bearing.

MAGPIE. The falcon of inn signs has been corrupted to a magpie in the following instances. The falcon and fetterlock, the badge of Edward IV., and hence united to a crown, has become the Magpie and Crown. The device of Anne Boleyn was "a white falcon, crowned, upon the root of a tree, environed with white and red roses :"* its modern representative is the Magpie and Stump !

The BIRD-IN-HAND may have originated either from the crest of some family,—‘a hand holding a falcon,’—or from the well-known old proverb :

“A bird in hand is better far
Than two that in the bushes are !”

In this latter case the moral intended by it may be, that the wayfarer should avail himself of the rest and refreshment close at hand, rather than run any risk of not meeting with accommodation elsewhere.

CRANE, an heraldic charge.

4. Fishes.

DOLPHIN, a common heraldic bearing.

WHALE. What can be the meaning of the Old Whalebone at Colchester and elsewhere ?

MACKAREL. ‘Three Mackarel’ at Dover.

To this list of heraldic animals must be added the DRAGON, once a royal supporter, the MERMAID, the FLYING HORSE, the GRIFFIN, and other fabulous monsters, chiefly from the supporters of noble families, and generally of modern date.

* Gent. Mag., July, 1831, p. 21.

5. Vegetable Productions.

Apple-tree, Pear-tree, Iron Pear-tree, Cherry-tree, Yew-tree, Three Trees, Five Ashes. Sometimes heraldic, but more frequently derived from trees of the particular species now or formerly growing near the inns which bear these signs. The Ash-tree, a little public-house at Ashburnham, co. Sussex, takes its sign from the canting crest of the noble family resident in the vicinity.

ROSE. Rose and Crown, the Tudor badge.

FLEUR DE LIS.

WHEATSHEAF, the 'garb' of heraldry.

6. Among the inanimate objects borrowed from heraldry and employed as signs, are the following:—

CROWN. Crown and Anchor, Crown and Sceptre, Crown and Thistle, Crown and Dolphin, &c.

STAR. Star and Garter.*

AXE. The warrior's—not the carpenter's.

CROSS-KEYS, common in church-heraldry. A surname.

FEATHERS, the Prince of Wales's badge. A surname.

HORSE-SHOES. Three Horse-shoes, Four Horse-shoes, &c. (Coats of Arms.)

SUN, SEVEN STARS, MOON, HALF-MOON (the crescent of heraldry), STAR (the mullet).

TABARD, a herald's coat.

Three being the favourite number of repetitions in coats of arms, such signs as the Three Crowns, Three Cups, Three Tuns, &c., may be regarded as having originated in the arms of families formerly resident in the vicinity. The Three Kings are evidently those of Cologne, and should therefore have been reckoned among religious signs. The Three Compasses are from the arms of the Carpenters' Company.

* This, however, may relate to our highest order of knighthood.

CLASS III. Signs referring to Distinguished Personages are generally of a very uninteresting character, and I shall therefore dismiss them in a few words.

Some relate to Sovereignty, as the King's Head, Queen's Head, Pope's Head. These were all complimentary and loyal. There are in London, inns designated in honour of George the Fourth, William the Fourth, Victoria, &c., and even of foreign princes, as the King of Prussia, King of Denmark, Queen of Hungary.

Such signs as the Duke of Wellington, the Lord Nelson, the Lord Holland, and particularly the Marquis of Granby, abound usque ad nauseam. Inn-keepers frequently express their admiration of favourite statesmen by hanging them—to their sign-posts; as the George Canning, the Earl Grey, the Lord John Russell! This, me judice, is all in very paltry taste; there is, however, another group of this division which is more to be commended, namely, that which does honour to the illustrious names of literature and olden history, as the King Alfred, Alfred's Head (at Wantage, his birthplace), the Friar Bacon, the Shakspeare Inn, the Butler's Head, with the more apocryphal, Robin Hood, Sir John Falstaff, Guy of Warwick, &c., and the more general, Druid's Head, Crusader, &c. At Paris, we find "à Jeanne d'Arc," and "à la Pucelle d'Orléans."

CLASS IV. Many signs are emblematical of Inns, and allusive to drinking. Of the more obvious class it will be sufficient to name the Grapes, the Vine, the Three Tuns, the Puncheon, the Barleymow, the Leather Bottle, the Fountain, and the Punch-bowl, with the more modern Canteen, Free Butt, Malt and Hops, and others even less classical than these. Some others need explanation, particularly the following :—

‘The Devil and the Bag o’ Nails.’ This singularly unclassical sign had a very classical origin. At Pimlico, a century since, existed a device appropriate enough for a tavern, namely, ‘Pan and the Bacchanals;’ but the painting having become almost obliterated by the weather, only faint traces of the Arcadian deity remained, and these were not unnaturally mistaken for the lineaments of Satan; while the votaries of Bacchus, became by a different process (which has certainly something demoniacal about it) a bag of nails!

A writer in the Gentleman’s Magazine,* in spite of the above fact, suggests “that the Bag o’ Nails, instead of being a corruption was a figure of rhetoric; the bag of nails originally represented on a sign being intended by the erudite landlord to be read Bacchanals; though, as has been the case with more important hieroglyphics, the signification was doomed to perish, while the figure remained. ‘Sic,’ he wittily adds, ‘Sic transit gloria pundi!’” Some years ago an ironmonger in Goswell Street, in a matter-of-fact spirit adopted the Bag of Nails as the sign of his establishment.

* Vol. lxxxviii., i. p. 296.

'The Devil and Punchbowl' was probably a Bacchanalian figure with his wine-cup.

'The Chequers.' There are some inns known by this sign; but the chequered square painted upon the doorpost is common to many inns bearing a more specific one. The chequer occurs on an inn among the ruins of Pompeii, indicating, as Brand* thinks, that some game analogous to draughts or chess might be played within. In mediæval times Le Chequer occurs as a sign.† Fosbroke adds that it was "the external denotement of an ale-house, even so lately as 1700,"—he might have said till our own times.

A foolish notion regarding this sign has found its way into some respectable publications; namely, that the chequers represent the arms of the ancient Earls of Warenne, who it is asserted possessed, in or soon after the time of William Rufus, the exclusive right of granting licences for the sale of beer. It would be very difficult, I think, to produce the charter by which this important right was acquired; besides which, the De Warenne arms were 'chequy, or and azure,' while in the ale-house chequers the prevailing tincture is red.

The 'Red Lattice' seems to be identical with the chequers. It is repeatedly referred to by our old dramatists. In the 'Miseries of Inforced Marriage,' 1607, we read—

"'Tis treason to the red lattice, enemy to the sign-post;"

and in 'Arden of Faversham,' 1592—

"His sign pulled down, his lattice borne away:"

and again in 'Antonio and Melida,' 1633—

"As well known by my wit, as an ale-house by a red lattice."

* Popular Antiq., ii. 215; edit. Sir H. Ellis. † Anglia Sacra, i. 143.

In the 'Christmass Ordinary,' 1682—

"Where Red Lettice doth shine,
'Tis an outward sign
Good ale is a traffic within."

Pop. Antiq., ii. 217-18.

In the further progress of corruption, lattice and lettice became lettuce, and the Red and even the Green Lettuce still figure as inn signs.

'The Bush.'

"Good wine needs no bush."—Old Proverb.

"I rather will take down my bush and sign,
Than live by means of riotous expense."

Good Neues and Bad, 1662.

The 'bush,' like the chequers and the lattice, was rather a general denotation of the trader in liquors than a specific sign, which however in many instances it became. In former times, a bush or a besom affixed to any article denoted its vendibility. The top-mast of a ship or a boat for sale is so decorated to this day, and in some country fairs, horse-dealers and others put a bough upon the heads of the animals they wish to dispose of. With regard to inns, the bush may have a classical allusion to the ivy-bush, sacred to Bacchus. Old Braithwaite dedicates his 'Strappado for the Divell' to Bacchus, whom he styles "sole souveraigne of the ivy-bush, prime founder of red lettices!"*

In some remote villages we occasionally meet with a birch broom affixed to the top of the May-pole in front of a way-side hostelry, reminding us of a passage in Dekker's 'Wonderful Yeare'—"Spied a bush at the end of a pole, the auncient badge of a country ale-house." But this relic of antiquity is fast disappearing.

* Pop. Antiq., ii. 216.

Sometimes the innkeeper indicated his calling by several of the above emblems in combination. In the 'Compleat Vintner,' 1720, we read—

"Without there hangs a noble sign,
Where golden Grapes in image shine—
To crown the Bush a little punch-gut Bacchus, dangling of a bunch, Sits loftily enthroned upon
What's called (in miniature) a tun."

Pop. Antiq., ii. 218.

"The owner of the Mourning Bush in Aldersgate was so affected at the decollation of Charles I," says Fosbroke, "that he painted his bush black."

I have in another place alluded to the occasional use of rebuses as inn signs. I may here add to those before enumerated, the Bolt (or arrow) and Ton, the device of Prior Bolton, and the Hat and Ton, that of the Hattons.

A word may be said here on the absurd combinations sometimes met with in inn signs.

"I'm amazed at the signs
As I pass through the town :
To see the odd mixture
A Magpye and Crown, (vide p. 157, ante)
The Whale and the Crow,
The Razor and Hen,
The Leg and Sev'n Stars,
The Bible and Swan,
The Ax and the Bottle,
The Ton and the Lute, (rebus of Luton?)
The Eagle and Child, (crest of Stanley,)
The Shovel and Boot."

British Apollo, 1710.

Most if not all of these are referable to heraldry, but some others have a different source. The Goose and Gridiron, for instance, is the Swan and Harp, in allusion to the fabulous musical powers of that bird; the Pig and Pepperbox is a similar travestie of the Elephant and Castle; the Cat and Fiddle seems to have no more recondite an origin than the well-known nursery-rhyme; and the Cat and Bagpipes appears to be another reading of the hare and bagpipe of the old illuminators.

Of such combinations as the Three Nuns and a Hare, the Cow and Hare, the Hand and Star, the Leg and Star, the Ship and Last, some are probably heraldic, and others originated, according to the Spectator, in the apprentice uniting, when he set up in trade, the sign of his master to the one of his own adoption.*

CLASS V. Signs, allusive to particular Trades, have often been transferred to inns, particularly when the proprietors have previously been shopkeepers. E.g. :—

The Alphabet marked a stationer.

The Artichoke, a gardener.

The Bee-hive was a general symbol of industry.

The Bible and Crown denoted a loyal bookseller.

The Blue Last, a shoemaker.

The Cannon, Gun, &c., a gun-founder.

* "It is usual for a young tradesman at his first setting up, to add to his own sign that of the master whom he served; as the husband after marriage gives a place to his mistress's arms in his own coat. This I take to have given rise to many of those absurdities which are committed over our heads. . . . I would establish certain rules for determining how far one tradesman may give the sign of another, and in what cases he may be allowed to quarter it with his own!"—Spectator, vol. i. No. 28.

The Cow-leech (a provincial word), a farrier ; and The Golden Fleece, a draper.

The Green Man. M. Paris says, "Foresters were noted for setting up ale-houses ; hence the Green Man,"* the dress of a forester being of that colour. At Ringmer, co. Sussex, is an inn with this sign ; the original landlord had been the keeper of Broyle Park, in the vicinity. What is the meaning of Still in the 'Green Man and Still ?' This latter sign gave rise to the following witticism : Mr. Jekyll meeting his friend Lord Erskine, said, "May I congratulate you, my lord, on having the green ribbon ?" "Yes," replied his lordship, "yet I am the same man still." "Then," rejoined the humorous barrister, "it will be a most evident sign of your deserts, and therefore you must be the Green Man and Still !"

The Harrow, Plough, &c., marked a husbandman.

The Hand and Shears, a tailor.

The Old Ship, Old Sheer Hulk, Ship and Shovel, Schooner, Cutter ; a sailor. In these and some other cases the signs seem to have been devised with a view to attract a particular class of customers.

The Sugar Loaf, a grocer.

The Woolpack, a wool-stapler.

The Windmill, a miller.

It is unnecessary to multiply instances.

CLASS VI. Inn Signs referring to Sports and Pastimes are of frequent occurrence.

The Anglers, for the accommodation of the disciples of Izaak Walton.

Bugle Horn, in hunting districts.

* Fosb. Encyc., p. 502.

Bat and Ball, for cricketers. The landlord originally a distinguished 'batter' or 'bowler.'

Bells. Three, Five, Six, Eight, Bells, &c. The peculiarly English pastime of ringing has originated this class of signs. The number generally corresponds with that of the peal of some neighbouring church. The Blue Bell is probably heraldic.

Dog and Duck—in fen countries where the pastime of duck-shooting prevails.

Dog and Bear. This sign refers to the cruel but now obsolete sport of bear-baiting which was much practised in the middle ages.

Huntsman, in hunting districts } often kept by the Hare and Hounds, } local huntsman.

Kentish Cricketers. Kent has long been famous for this amusement.

Wrestlers, in Cornwall and elsewhere.

CLASS VII. Miscellaneous.

Sometimes houses of entertainment bear the names of neighbouring objects, as the Castle, the Bridge, the Pier, the Gate, the Yew Tree, Kit's Coty House (near Rochester), close to the singular cromlech so called Chalk Farm, at the place so called, near London, &c.

Sometimes local and historical events are referred to, as the Conqueror and South Saxon at Hastings, the Royal Oak, &c.

Some signs are national, as the Albion, the Britannia, the Old England, the Union; others sentimental, as the Fortune of War, the Hope, the Perseverance, the Providence, the Good Intent. These are all modern. Many such signs occur at Paris, as "à la Fidélité," "à l'Activité," "à la Vérité," "à l'Espérance," &c.

Low humour has given rise to many, as the Good Woman, i.e., a headless woman; the Labour in Vain, a man attempting to wash a Blackmoor white—the Paris version of it is, “au Temps Perdu;” and the Three Loggerheads, two only being painted on the sign, while the spectator completes the trio!

I have incidentally mentioned several singular and ludicrous corruptions in inn signs; two others of familiar name deserve especial notice, viz., the Bull and Mouth, and the Bell Savage. The former is exhibited as a bull standing by the side of a monstrous human mouth, whereas the object primarily intended was the mouth or harbour of Boulogne, a compliment, as Mr. Roby supposes, to Henry VIII., who took that port in 1544.*

The Bell Savage was represented as a large church bell and a savage man. According to the Spectator, ‘la belle sauvage’ was the heroine of an ancient French romance, which told the story of a beautiful lady found in a forest in a wild or savage state†; but Mr. Roby asserts that the inn and its court-yard were denominated from one ‘Isabella Savage,’ a lady who once possessed these premises and conveyed them to the Cutlers’ Company. This statement is as far from the truth as the other, without the merit of being so picturesque, since the real donor of the property was a Mrs. Craithorne, whose portrait is still preserved at Cutlers’ Hall, in Cloak Lane.‡

OBSERVATIONS ON CHRISTIAN NAMES.

IN jotting down a few notes on personal or individual names, it is not my intention to wander far into the mazes of etymology. A host of writers have already employed their pens upon this subject, and perhaps few topics could be named upon which an equal amount of false reasoning has been employed. It is a field in which ingenuity may revel ad libitum, but one which yields little solid or satisfactory fruit. The origin of Surnames, belonging as it does to comparatively recent periods of the world's history, is of easy ascertainment as contrasted with that of our personal nomenclature, which belongs in general to remote ages, to rude states of social existence, and to a great variety of languages, whose beginnings are themselves shrouded in mystery. To support a favourite theory, the most absurd and far-fetched etymons have often been sought out, and, according to the bias of each several investigator, the Oriental, the Classical, or the Northern languages have respectively been made the chief sources of all existing appellations of this class. One writer insists upon a particular name being from the Hebrew; another asserts that it is archaic Greek; while a third is quite confident that it is Celtic or Teutonic; and it has even been attempted to prove, from the names of the earliest patriarchs of mankind, that the primeval nomenclature of our race was Hebrew, or German, or Welsh! It will therefore be obvious to the most uninitiated in these matters, that anything like a general view of Christian names, like that which I have attempted in these volumes to give of family names, would abound with vexatæ quæstiones foreign both to the scope of my abilities and to the design and purport of my undertaking.

Christian names are so called from their having originally been given to converts at baptism as substitutes for their former Pagan appellatives, many of which were borrowed from the names of their gods, and therefore rejected as profane. After the general introduction of Christianity, the epithet was still retained, because the imposition of names was ever connected with the earliest of its sacred rites. It is, nevertheless, most incorrect; since the majority of the personal names of modern times are borrowed from sources unconnected with Christianity. With what propriety can we call Hercules and Diana, Augustus and Julia, or even Henry and Caroline, Christian names?

Until about the commencement of the seventeenth century, no material change in the designations of Englishmen had occurred since the days of the earlier Edwards, when surnames were generally adopted. John de la Barre, it is true, had become plain John Barr, and Roger atte Hylle had softened to Roger Hill, but still the principle of a single Christian name and a single surname had been maintained throughout.

About the period alluded to, the innovation of a second personal name occurs, though but very rarely. The practice was imported from the Continent, where it seems to have originated among the literati in imitation of the tria nomina of antiquity. The accession of the many-named house of Brunswick may be said to have rendered it somewhat fashionable; and during the last century it has become every year more common. Should the fashion continue, it is probable that at the close of the nineteenth century it will be as difficult to find a binomiated person in this country, as it is in France at the present day.

Another innovation belongs to the seventeenth century; I mean the use of some family name as a baptismal appellation, as Gouldsmith Hodgson, Boscawen Lower, Cloudesley Shovel. This practice as well as the other is, I think, highly to be commended, as serving to identify the individual with the designation. The genealogist will at once see its utility; and I would again suggest to parents the desirableness of inserting the maternal family name between the proper name of baptism and the surname, as James Morton Wilson, Henry Smith Bradley. I would indeed go further, and add the maiden family name of the wife to the surname of the husband; thus, if a Charles Harrison married a Mary Bradshawe, they should thereupon write themselves respectively Charles Bradshawe-Harrison and Mary Bradshawe-Harrison. If Vanity unites in the same escutcheon the arms of the wife with those of her lord, ought not Affection in like manner to blend their names? This usage is voluntarily followed at Geneva and in many provinces of France; and it serves to distinguish the bachelor from the married man.

In some districts, where a family name was originally applied at the font instead of the usual James, Peter, or John, that family name has come to be regarded as a regular Christian name. For example : about Lewes, Trayton is fully as common as Samuel, Nicholas, Alfred, or any name occupying the second rank in point of frequency, and only less usual than Henry, William, and John. In the sixteenth century a family of this name, from Cheshire, settled at Lewes, and continued to reside there for several successive generations, during the latter part of which period they became so popular that a host of children received the baptismal name of Trayton in compliment to them. The spirit of imitation succeeded ; and there are at the present day scores of Traytons, who have neither any idea of the origin of their name, nor any doubt of its being as orthodox as the very common appellatives above alluded to.

There are some singular superstitions regarding the imposition of baptismal names. The peasantry of Sussex believe that if a child receive a name previously given to a deceased brother or sister, it will also die at an early age. It is deemed lucky to bear a Christian name with the same initial as that of the surname, as Reuben Russell, Samuel Smith, Peter Pierpoint. In some parts of Ireland it is a commonly received notion, that by giving a child the name of one of its parents, the life of that parent is abridged ! In Esthonia many parents give their children the names of Adam and Eve, thinking thereby to ensure for them a long life. In Roman Catholic countries the imposition of a saint's name is supposed to bespeak his or her patronage for the namesake.

We have seen, in Chapter XIII., that the Christian name, once imposed, cannot be altered at the option of the bearer, as the surname may; at least not without the sanction of episcopal authority. Towards the close of the last century, Sir William Bridges, of Goodneston, Bart., exchanged the name of William for that of Brooke, by licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury;* but this is almost a solitary instance in modern times, as the occasion for it rarely arises. Before the Reformation, the unauthorized change of a Christian name was a grave offence. It is recorded in the consistorial acts of the Bishop of Rochester, that on Oct. 15, 1515, one Agnes Sharpe appeared and confessed that she had “of her own motion and consent, voluntarily changed, at confirmation, the name of her infant son to Edward, who was when baptized named Henry, for which she submitted to penance.” The penance enjoined was to make a pilgrimage to the famous Rood of Grace, at the neighbouring abbey of Boxley, and to carry in procession, on five Lord’s days, a lighted taper which she was to offer to the image of the Blessed Virgin.†

Christian names, as well as Surnames, are often exposed to most ludicrous corruptions. A good story, in point, is told by ‘the Doctor.’ “A gentleman, called Anketil Gray, had occasion for the certificate of his baptism; it was known at what church he had been baptized, but on searching the register there, no such name could be found; some mistake was presumed, therefore, not in the entry, but in the recollection of the parties, and many other registers were examined without success. At length the first register was again referred to, and then upon a closer investigation they found him entered as Miss Ann Kettle Grey !*

* This is contradicted in C^ourthope’s Debrett, 1836, where the archbishop’s power to change a name is denied.

The imposition of baptismal names has frequently been influenced by some whim of the parents. At Charlton, co. Kent, three female children, produced at one birth, received the names of Faith, Hope, and Charity. A peasant, residing in a village on the South Downs, in Sussex, once presented an infant at the font, and desired the officiating minister to give him the name of "Acts." The clergyman, puzzled at the suggestion of so strange a name, inquired how it was spelt, and whence it had been selected. The honest man replied that it was a Scripture name, and as his four former children bore the names of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, he should like to have this one christened "Acts !" The intention was, however, overruled, and a more regular appellation conferred. Unfortunately for the poor child, the circumstance was not forgotten in his after-life ; and as he had two younger brothers, named respectively Richard and Thomas, the roguish urchins of the village used to annoy the whole family by the following rigmarole :

" Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, Acts o' Postles, Dick, and Tom !"

While we possess so great a variety of excellent Christian names, it is astonishing that so few should be in ordinary use. The common English dictionaries contain lists of about 250 male and 130 female names; but out of these not more than about twenty or thirty for each sex can be called at all usual. Nearly a moiety of males may be said to be either Johns, or Williams, or Jameses, or Georges, or Henriess, or Thomases, or Richards. If, in addition to these, we enumerate the Fredericks, the Edwards, the Josepchs, the Charleses, the Matthews, the Nicholases, the Peters, the Philips, the Stephens, the Roberts, the Alfreds, and the Walters, nine-tenths of our "mankind" will be found upon the muster-roll, and only a tithe will remain to answer to the less usual, but often much more beautiful and euphonious, names.

If we examine our female names we arrive at a very similar result. Mary, Anne, Elizabeth, Eliza, Sarah, and Jane, are universal, while in the second rank Catherine, Emma, Frances (or Fanny), Hannah, Harriet, Ellen, Lucy, Maria, Martha, Sophia, and two or three others, bear sway.

The dread of singularity seems to be the principal motive for thus restricting our personal nomenclature. But why should we shrink from the use of such noble appellations as Alexander, Alban, Ambrose, Arthur, Bernard, Christopher, Clement, Edgar, Egbert, Ethelbert, Gilbert, Gregory, Godfrey, Harold, Lawrence, Leonard, Michael, Marmaduke, Oliver, Paul, Ralph, Reginald, Roger, Roland, Sylvester, Theobald, Urban, Valentine, and Vincent, which have one or all of the attributes of euphony, of a good etymology, and of interesting historical associations? And why, again, should we deny to the gentler sex the graceful designations of Agnes, Agatha, Arabella, Beatrix, Bertha, Blanche, Cecilia, Dorothy, Edith, Gertrude, Gunhilda, Gundrada, Isabel, Julia, Leonora, Maud, Mildred, Philippa, Ursula, and Winefride ?

The euphony of our nomenclature would be greatly improved by the judicious adaptation of the Christian name to the Surname. When the latter is a monosyllable, the former should be long. Nothing can reconcile the tasteful ear to such curt names as Job Guy, Luke Pont, Mark Sharpe, Ann Foote, Jane Fox ; while Cecilia Guy, Arabella Pont, and Christopher Sharpe, are far from despicable. For the most part Old Testament names should be avoided as defective in euphony, and inharmonious with English family names. Isaac Newton and Samuel Johnson, divested of their associations with the men, would sound as harshly as Ezekiel Briggs or Daniel Perkins. The female names are still less musical ; nothing could reconcile us to Ruth Brett, or Rebecca Dickenson, or Dinah Winterbotham. To prove that the unpleasant effect produced by such combinations does not result from the surnames selected, let us substitute appellations which are unexceptionable, and the result will be even worse—for example : Ruth Pelham ! Rebecca Howard !! Dinah Neville !!! Care should also be taken to avoid the combination of a classical Christian name with a surname of decidedly Teutonic origin, Agatha Newton, does not sound so well as Agatha Cecil, nor Augustus Hartley so well as Augustus Romaine. Here again the cacophony does not result from the surname, for, to my ear at least, Bertha Newton and Roger Hartley are better names than the other two.

Some parents exercise their ingenuity in selecting for their children a Christian name unsusceptible of the *nick*ing or abbreviating process, thinking with Doctor Dove that "it is not a good thing to be Tom'd or Bob'd, Jack'd or Jim'd, Sam'd or Ben'd, Natty'd or Batty'd, Neddy'd or Teddy'd, Will'd or Bill'd, Dick'd or Nick'd, Joe'd or Jerry'd, as you go through the world." By-the-way, that eminent worthy entertained no such repugnance to the feminine alias; for "he always used either the baptismal name or its substitute as it happened to suit his fancy, careless of what others might do. Thus he never called any woman Mary, though Mare, he said, being the sea, was in many respects too emblematic of the sex. It was better to use a synonyme of better omen, and Molly was therefore preferred as being soft. If he accosted a vixen of that name in her worst temper, he Mollyfied her! On the contrary, he never could be induced to substitute Sally for Sarah. Sally, he said, had a salacious sound, and moreover it reminded him of rovers, which women ought not to be. Martha he called Patty, because it came pat to the tongue. Dorothy remained Dorothy, because it was neither fitting that women should be made Dolls nor I-dols! Susan with him was always Sue, because women were to be Sue-ed, and Winifred, Winny, because they were to be won."*

ENGLAND AND WALES,

INCLUSIVE.*

THIS document, which was kindly forwarded to me by W. H. W. Titheridge, Esq., is a curious piece of statistics, and may afford gratification to those who have taken the trouble to peruse these volumes. An analysis of it might not be unworthy of attention, but I must content myself with a few general observations.

First, it will be seen that our old friends the Smiths maintain their character for numerousness, no less than 5588 having been added by birth in a single year, while only 4044 have died, leaving a clear gain of 1544. The Joneses present us with 5353 new specimens of their race, the Browns with 2366, and the Robinsons with 1455. The two latter, it may be remarked, have lost somewhat of their popularity, being totally eclipsed by the Taylors (2647) and the Williamsses (3490). The Davieses (2252) and the Thomases (2236) nearly equal the Browns, while they clearly exceed the Robinsons. This, however, is mainly owing to the Welsh, whose paucity of surnames gives the preponderance in all the cases alluded to except the Taylors, who are now fairly entitled to stand third, if not second, in the list of strictly English family names.

* Extracted from the Indexes in the General Registration Office.

2. Of the 60 names shown in this document to be the most numerous, 59 are of indigenous growth. The only foreign one is that of Marshall, and it is highly curious that it occupies the lowest place on the list, having yielded but 598 new individuals within the year.

3. Not one local surname of the first class occurs among the sixty; of the second, Green, Hall, Hill, and Wood, with Lee, Moore, and Shaw, fully sustain their numerosity.

4. The surnames derived from Christian or personal names, are, of course, in an overwhelming majority. The limited number of surnames in Wales, above alluded to, contributes largely to this result.

5. Of names derived from employments (whether official or manual), Baker, Clark, Cooper, Turner, Walker, Ward, and Wright, occupy (next to Smith and Taylor) the highest place. Of Kings, 883 arrived in these realms, while 789 were deposed by the grim monarch, before whom “Sceptre and crown must tumble down,

And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.”

Lastly, although the surnames derived from personal and moral qualities are exceedingly numerous, only three—Browne, Mitchell, and White—claim a place among the mighty sixty.

The Roll of Battel Abbey.

INTRODUCTION.

HAVE already mentioned this celebrated document, and I cannot better introduce it to the reader than by a quotation from Noble's curious and valuable "Dissertation on the various Changes in the Families of England since the Conquest," prefixed to his 'History of the College of Arms:'

"Those who had fought under the ducal banners [at Hastings] took every possible means to have their names well known and remembered by future ages, not only because they and their descendants would by it be enabled to plead for favours from the reigning family, and an assuring to themselves the estates they had gained, but also from the pride inherent in human nature as founders of families in a country they had won by their prowess. For these reasons the name of every person of any consideration was written upon a Roll, and hung up in the Abbey of Battel.*

* William ordered the erection of a Monastery on the very spot where he had gained that decisive victory which gave him the crown of England; from which circumstance it was called Battel Abbey.

“As the persons there mentioned were the patriarchs of most of the English gentry for many ages, and of many of our chief nobility of the present day, it will not be improper to examine into the authenticity of this roll of names; for different authors have given, some a greater, and some a less, number. As to the orthography, it is of little consequence; the spelling of names was not at that time, nor for many ages afterwards, fixed; every one writing them as he pleased.

“Grafton, in his ‘Chronicle,’ has given very many names, which he received from Clarenceux, king at arms, and out of John Harding’s ‘Chronicle,’ with others. Holinshed mentions upwards of six hundred; Stowe, in his ‘Chronicle,’ only four hundred and seven; Thomas Scriven, Esq., still fewer. Fuller, in his ‘Church History,’ has copied them, but he does not mention who Mr. Scriven was, nor from whence that gentleman took them. Foxe, in his ‘Acts and Monuments,’ has also given in a list of the names of William’s officers and great men; but these, Fuller thinks, were not collected by Foxe. This catalogue of names is valuable, however, because the initials of the Christian names are given. The great difference made in these collections, naturally leads us to suspect that many omissions are made in some, and that numbers of names have been put into others to please individuals. Sir William Dugdale openly accuses the monks of Battel of flattery, from having inserted the names of persons whose ancestors were never at the Conquest. Guiliam Tayleur, a Norman historian, who could not have had any communication with the monks of Battel, has also published the muster-roll, which was called over after the battle of Hastings.”*

In the foregoing enumeration of the copies of this famous Roll, the writer does not mention Leland's copy, nor that of Dugdale. It is remarkable that although many, perhaps the majority, of the names occur in all the copies, others occur in one or two only; and the difference between the copies is such as to render all attempts at collation useless. As my object is to give names said to have been introduced into this country by the Norman Conquest, rather than a critical inquiry into the authenticity of the several lists, I shall lay before the reader three of the latter, namely, those of Leland, Holinshed, and Foxe, adding, en passant, such notes and observations as may seem useful in illustration of the subject.

The original ROLL, compiled by the monks of Battel, was hung up in their monastery, beneath the following Latin verses :

“Ficitur a bello, Bellum locus hic, quia bello
 Angligenae victi, sunt hic in morte relictī :
 Martyris in Christi festo cecidere Calixti :
 Sexagenus erat sextus millesimus annus,
 Cum pereunt Angli, stella monstrante cometa.”

* “The day after the battel, very early in the morning, Odo, Bishop of Baieux, sung masse for those that were departed. The duke after that, desirous to know the estate of his battell, and what people he had therein lost and were slaine, he caused to come unto him a clerk, that had written their names when they were embarked at S. Valeries, and commanded him to call them all by their names, who called them that had been at the battell, and passed the seas with Duke William.”
 —John Foxe, Acts and Mon.

Id est,

“This place is called Battel, because the English, slain in war, were here left dead. They fell on the day of the feast of Christ’s martyr, Calixtus. It was the year one thousand and sixty-six when the English perished, a great comet being visible at the time.”

A metrical English version of these verses was formerly inscribed on a tablet in the parish church of Battel.

“This place of war is Battel called, because in battel here, Quite conquered and overthrown the English nation were;
This slaughter happened to them upon St. Celict’s day,
The year whereof (1066) this number doth array.”

Of the history of the Roll subsequently to the dissolution of the monastery nothing certain is known. Three months after the surrender of the abbey, the site and lands were given by Henry VIII. to Sir Anthony Browne, ancestor of the Vicounts Montague. This family sold the mansion, with its appurtenances, to Sir Thomas Webster, Bart., and resided afterwards at their other seat, Cowdray House near Midhurst, and thither this famous document was probably carried.* Cowdray was destroyed by fire in 1793, when the Roll is presumed to have perished, with everything else of value which that lordly edifice contained.

Battel Abbey is now the property and residence of the Duke of Cleveland, who has in a praiseworthy spirit restored the remains of the grand old edifice, which is one of the finest historical monuments we possess.

* Gleanings respecting Battel Abbey.

Leland's Copy.

THE preference ought unquestionably to be conceded to this copy. John Leland saw and transcribed the original; and in the notes to his transcript he notices some particular points marked upon the Roll, which he also transfers to his copy. There seems to be an attempt to arrange the names in such a manner as to make the last syllable of the second pair rhyme with that of the first, and also to produce alliteration in the pairs, e.g. :—

‡ Caperoun. The ancient family of Quaife, of Kent and Sussex, have a tradition that their ancestor came into England with the Conqueror, and that he was called Coife, because he wore a hood in battle instead of a helmet. Now caperoun is the old French for chaperon, a hood, which renders it exceedingly probable that the individual named in the Roll and the person referred to by the tradition are identical.

* From the frequent occurrence of names with such very English orthographies, one of two things is pretty certain. Either the monks of Battel introduced names of English families surreptitiously to gratify the vanity of benefactors, or the Roll cannot have been compiled until many years after the foundation of the Abbey, and by persons who did not understand the French language. This remark may seem to clash with a former note, (vide the name of Hasting in Leland's copy;) but the names borrowed from seignories in England, immediately after the Conquest, were very few in number

John Foxe's Copy.

It is, strictly speaking, a misnomer to call this a copy of the Battel Roll. Foxe does not mention it as such, but says, he took it "out of the Annals of Normandy, in French, whereof one very ancient written booke in parchment remaineth in the custody of the writer hereof."

Latinized Surnames.

AS Latin was the language employed by the clerks of early times, proper names were almost uniformly latinized. This practice was in full vogue from the eleventh century to the sixteenth, in most legal and other documents written in that language. Thus Hall was made D'AULA; Rivers, De RIPARIIS; and Haultry, D'ALTA RIPA. Gilbert de Aquila, surnamed the Great, who flourished in the eleventh century, was called Gislebertus Magnus. This name was again transformed into the Saxon as Gilbert Michel; and it is remarkable that although the family of which he was the head is extinct in the legitimate line, there are two English families illegitimately descended from him still in existence—one bearing for their patronymic Egles, from Aquila, and the other Michel, from Magnus—the one his family, the other his personal surname. By means of this latinization some very commonplace names were transformed into high-sounding appellations—Goldsmith and Saltmarsh, for instance, became Aurifaber and Salsomerisco. Sometimes the English form was retained with a Latin termination, as Lowerus Boscwinus, Lower Boscawen, Thomas Chouneus, Thomas Chowne. Even scholars and divines affected this pedantry, and that after the revival of learning, not in England alone, but in Holland, Germany, and several other countries.* Some of these attempts to put modern names into a Latin dress were extremely ridiculous. Andrew BORDE, the "original merry Andrew," in his 'Boke of the Introduction of Knowledge,' written in the reign of Henry VIII., styles himself Andreas Perforatus (bored!). But this is nothing to the name of Sir John Hawkwood being turned into Johannes Acutus! Let Verstegan tell the story:

"Some gentlemen of our nation travelling into Italy and passing thorow Florence, there, in the great church, beholding the monument and epitaph of the renowned English knight, and most famous warrior of his time, there named Johannes Acutus, long wondered what John Sharp this might be, seeing in England they had never heard of any such, his name rightly written being indeed Sir John Hawkwood; but by omitting the H in Latine as frivolous, and the K and W as unusual, he is here from Hawkwood turned into Acutus, and from Acutus returned in English again unto Sharp!"

Camden gives a list of latinized surnames in his Remaines.† In Wright's "Court Hand Restored,"‡ is a more copious catalogue, which I here copy, in the hope that it will prove useful to the antiquary, and afford some amusement to the general reader. It is certainly interesting in an etymological point of view although not much to be depended upon in that

* Does not our veneration for Erasmus and Grotius and old Puteanus receive a slight shock, when we find that they were, de jure, only simple Gerard and Groot and Vandeput?
